No. 1.

Sir A. Nicolson to Sir Edward Grey.—(Received January 3, 1910.)

(No. 677. Secret.)

St. Petersburgh, December 27, 1909.

I HAVE the honour to transmit berewith copy of an eide-mésoire which M. Isvolsky handed to me yesterday, and which is a reply to various communications which, by your direction, I have from time to time made to him in regard to the discussions between the British and German financial groups respecting the Bagdad Railway. M. Isvolsky explained to me that this memorandum must not be considered as an exhausive statement of the views of the Russian Government, but merely as prelimimany observations. The memorandum carries the question but little further forward, and leaves the views of the Russian Government still in the region of conjecture.

It seems to me that the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh has been in full possession for some weeks just of the nature of the proposals made by the German group, and that their enquiries as to the memorandum of 1997 have in reality Ettle bearing on the new development which has recently taken place. I had hoped that M. Isvolsky would have been able to have given some general indication as to the conditions on which the Russian Government would wish to participate in the milway, and it would have been of especial interest to have known on what basis he proposes to negotiate with the German Government. I will endeavour later to ascertain whether he is willing or able to give some further calightenment on this point.

M. Isvolsky read to me a letter and a telegram which he had received from Count. Bonokendorff reporting what he had gathered of the results of the mosion of Sir E. Cassel, and also giving the substance of a conversation with M. Paul Cambon, who had related to him what Hilmy Pushs had said to M. Bompard at Constantinople, M. lavolsky enquired of me whether I had received my information on the fatter subject. replied that M. Louis had been good onough to acquaint me with the statements of Hilmy Pasha. M. Isvolsky said that the question seemed to be confused, as if the Turkish Government were really to oppose any biscotion of the line the proposed arrangement between the German and British groups might have to be considerably

I beg leave to enclose copies of the pro-memoria, and of the communications from the to which reference is made in the Russian aide memoire.

I have, &c.

A. NICOLSON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 1.

Aide-memoire by M. Isvolaky,

(Confidentiel.) LF. Ministère Imperial des Affaires Étrangères u'a pas manqué d'examiner l'aidetuemoire du 6 (19) novembre dernier ainsi que les quatre communications subsequentes de son Excellence Sir A. Nicolson on date des 9 (22), 11 (24), 14 (27) novembre, et du 18 (1°) décembre, relativement à la question du Chemin de Fer de Bagulad.

Le Ministère Impérial croit devoir tout d'abord relever un malentendu évident concernant la question de la surtare douanière en Turquie. Si le Cabinet Impérial n'a pas posé jusqu'ici comme condition de son assentiment à cette surfaxe que celle-ci ne serve pas à défrayer la gamatie kilométrique du Chemin de Fer de Bagdad, c'est uniquement parce qu'il considérait que la Porte a donné elle-même une assumnce explicite dans ce sens dans le dernier alinéa de su note du 5 (18) septembre dernier. S'il se trouve que cette assurance n'a pas de force obligatoire pour la Turquie, le Gouvernement Impérial ne manquera pas de formuler à ce sujet des réserves analogues à celles qui ont été faites par le Gouvernement britannque.

Le Ministère Impérial des Affaires Étrangères a appris avec une grande satisfaction que les récents pourparlers anglo-allemands au sujet du chemin de fer n'ont ou lieu Jusqu'ici qu'entre les deux groupes financiere, et que le Gouvernement britannique n'acceptera aucune proposition avant que cette question n'ait été discutée avec les Convernements de Russie et de France, en vue d'arriver à un arrangement à quatre.

Vu l'extrême complexité des intérêts russes en cause, le Gouvernement Impérial ne pourra formuler d'une manière détaillée les conditions auxquelles il pourra se jointre à un arrangement à quatre qu'après avoir soumis cette question à une étude approfondie ; il lui cet d'autant plus difficile de se pronouver immédiatement, que les communications de Sir A. Nicolson ne définissent pas clairement les bases de l'arrangement projeté ; la Cabinet de Londres renonce-t-il dès à présent aux idées énoncées dans le mémoire du 6 [sie] juin, 1907, remis par Sir E. Grey au Comte Benckendorff et qui different ossentiellement de celles dont s'inspirent les propositions allemandes? Ainsi, par exemple, le mémoire du 6 [sic] juin prévoyait la création d'une direction internationale, tandis que les propositions de M. Gwinner tendent à un sectionnement absolu de la ligne. Le mêmo mêmoire étendait la sphère des intérêts anglais jusqu'à un point "au nord de flagdad," tandis qu'actuellement il est question d'abandonner à l'Anglotorre le tronçon de la ligue à partir de Bagdad. Il importerait au Couvernement Impérial d'être fixé sur le point de vue du Cabinet de Londres avant d'émettre de son côté une opinion dátamainée.

Enfin, la réalisation du Chemin de Fer de Bagdad pouvant gravement menseer les intérêta russes en Perse, le Gouvernement. Impérial devra theher de s'entendre directoment avec l'Allemagne sur ce côté de la question ; il constate avec plainir que le Convernement britannique est favorable à une pareille entente; de non côté, le Gouvernement Impérial ne manquera pas d'observer strictement à cotte occasion les arrangements procedents qu'il a conclus au sujet de la Perse avec l'Angleterre et de tenir le Cabinet de Londres au courant de ses négociations éventuelles avec l'Allemagne.

Saint-Pétersbuurg, le 18 (25) décembre, 1909.

Inclosure 2 in No. 1.

Pro-memorid by Sir A. Nicolson.

(Confidential.)

IT will be within the knowledge of the Imperial Government that some weeks ago an application was made by Sir G. Lowther to the Sublime Porte for a railway concession for a line to connect the Persian Gulf with Bagdad via the valley of the River Tigris; and it was at the same time asked that the option should be granted to connect the Mediterranean Sea with Bagdad by a prolongation of the above-mentioned line along the Euphrates Valley.

It may also be known to the Imperial Government that the 4 per cent. surtax on the Turkish customs duties received the assent of His Majesty's Government on cartain conditions, among which was one to the effect that no kilometric guarantees should be defrayed out of the proceeds of the surtax, and that an assurance in writing to this effect should be obtained from the German Government by the Sublime Ports. It is, however, unlikely that this assurance will be given; for the Bagdad Railway Company are aware that unless the additional surtax on imports is assented to by the Powers and unless some, at least, of the proceeds therefrom are applied to pay kilometric guarantees, these guarantees cannot be defrayed.

A few days since M. Gwinner informed Sir H. Babington Smith that he is now ready to consent to the following conditions :-

1. Control over the Bagdad-Person Gulf section of the railway is to be British;

2. The construction of this section is to be carried out with British material and by British agency

3. Non-British interests are to participate in this section only in a subordinate capacity; and

4. The railway north of Bagdad is to be in no way connected with the British

Sir E. Grey lad informed Count Metternich that unless an agreement was reached respecting the Bagdad Railway, His Majesty's Government would be unable to consent to the Turkish customs duties being increased; and he had also observed that the necessity of inviting the co-operation of Russia as well as France constituted one of the difficulties in the way of His Majesty's Government participating in the railway. He now learns, however, that all rights to continue their railway south of Bacalad may possibly be unived by the German Government in favour of Great Britain, who would be left free, as regards the Bagdad Person Gulf Railway, to come to an arrangement with the Sublime Porte. It is essential for British interests in Mesopotamia to obtain this, which is the very point on which His Majesty's Government have invariably insisted. Other Powers, including Russis, are apparently disposed to agree unconditionally to the Turkish custom duties being increased; and His Majesty's Government would probably do likewise if the above-mentioned point were conceded by the German Government.

The German line north of Bagdad is a matter of very much less interest to His Majesty's Government than a line following an entirely different rente from Bagdad due

A decision in the matter is urgently needed, as the question of increasing the Turkish customs duties is involved. Opposition to such an increase cannot be maintained by His Majesty's Government alone; and once this point is conceded there will be no obstacle to the completion of the Bugdad Railway by Germany.

St. Petersburgh, November 6 (19), 1909,

Inclosure 3 in No. 1.

Sir A. Nicolson to M. Isvolsky.

Mon cher Ministro,

Saint-Péterabourg, le 9 (22) novembre, 1900.

[First part alludes to question as to trade routes in the south of Persia.]

JE serai toujours à votre disposition pour causur de nouveau sur la question du Chemin de Fer de Bagdad quand vous avez étudié la dernière phase de la question.

J'espère que j'ai bien expliqué que les propositions faites par M. Gwinner & Sir H. Babington Smith ne sont parvenues à Sir E. Grey que deux jours avant mon promemorid, et que nous n'avons pas perdu de temps en vous en faisant part.

A. NICOLSON.

Inclosure 4 in No. 1.

Sir A. Nicolson to M. Isvolsky.

(Confidential.)

Mon cher Ministre, St. Petersburgh, November 11 (24), 1901.

AFTER our convenation of Friday last in regard to the Bagdad Railway, I communicated to my Government the substance of some observations which you were good enough to make as being merely your first impressions, and not your final views. I have now received some further explanations from Sir E. Groy which I doubt not will catiraly clear up any doubts. In the first place, I would wish to state that no bargain has been concluded and no negotiations have as yet taken place with the German Government.

My Government are not giving Germany a free hand, as in fact she already had it by the concession. Germany hopes to obtain the necessary funds by an increase of the Turkish customs duties, and all the Powers, with the exception of England, were appearently ready to concede this increase without any stipulation about the Bugdad Railway. My Government were obliged to consider what atipulation they should make to protect themselves in giving their consent to the increase of customs duties. Russia can of course equally do the same, and my Government are waiting for your views before going further. Nothing more has been said to the German Ambassador than what I communicated in my pro-memorid of the 6th (19th) November. As I informed you in a private letter two or three days ago, as soon as the proposals of M. Gwinner reached my Government they were immediately communicated to you. Moreover, the impressions as to the terms on which Germany might agree with my Government were based on the information spontaneously given by M. Gwinner, and not on any negotiations with the German Government, for none has taken place. My Government are most anxious to know the decision to which the Imperial Government may arrive as to the conditions upon which they would be willing to participate in the railway north of Bagdad. My Government have always demanded the control and the construction of the line south of Bagdad, and they could not be satisfied with less. There can be little doubt that the line will be built eventually, whether England and Russis participate in it or not, and therefore my Government must consider with great attention the present situation and the offer which M. Gwinner has mooted; but before going further with the matter Sir E. Grey is anxious to know the views of the Russian Government. There is one conttor which renders the question of the southern section of extreme urgency. The Turkish Government are now communeing irrigation works south of Bagelad, and there is a probability of the river's being unnavigable from want of water. The river transport of British Indian trade, which has been in British hands for over fifty years, would thus become lost, with nothing to take its place until the railway is built.

You will see, then, that my Government, as soon as they received information as to what M. Gwinner proposed, lost no time in informing you, and that they have entered into no acgotiations and made no bargain with Germany. My Government are anxious to have your views as soon as possible as to Russian participation in the railway north of Bagdad, and as to the conditions you may wish to lay down in regard to increase of customs duties.

Sir A. Nicolson to M. Iscolsky.

Mon oher Ministre. St. Petersburgh, November 14 (27), 1900. IN order to complete the information which I have already given you, I should like to tell you that all that His Majesty's Government have done at present is to inform you and Paris of the substance of M. Gwinner's proposals, and have hitherto given no reply to these proposals. These proposals are the minimum of what would extist British public opinion and British interests, and in order to obtain the southern section my Government would be willing to waive their interests in the railway north of Bagdad. The British group wish that a concession should be obtained of a branch line from Bagdad to Khanikin, and although my Government would be glad to obtain such a concession or to participate with the Russian Government in its control and construction, they have refrained from giving any support to such a proposal, and would not do so without the concurrence of the Russian Government. My Government realise that Russian interests might be involved in a line terminating at a point on the limit of the Russian sphere of interest in Persia. The German Government are aware that M. Gwinner has made curtain proposals, but my Government propose to allow negotintions to be carried on by the English group on a purely commercial basis. My Government are most anxious to have the views of the Russian Government (of which they are at present in complete ignorance) as to participation in the Bagelad Railway, as a decision as to the increase of Turkish customs duties cannot be indefinitely postponed. My Government would naturally have no objection to the recognition by Germany of Russian interests in the Russian sphere of influence in Persia; but they could hardly remain indifferent if, in return for this, Russia were to make any concession to Germany in the neutral zone. My Government would certainly raise no objection to the opening of negotiations between Russia and Germany as to participation in the railway north of Bagdad, but they hope that the Russian Government would keep them informed of the progress of such negotiations.

Yours, &c.

Mon cher Ministre. St. Petersburgh, November 18 (December 1), 1909. REFERRING to previous communications in regard to the Bagdad Railway, ! beg leave to inform you that no negotiations are taking place with Germany, but that M. Gwianer had opened communications with the British group of financiers. It is not clear as yet what proposal will be the outcome of these communications, and until it is submitted to the British Government, with the approval of the German Government, it is not sure that it will be acceptable. If it be acceptable, His Majesty's Government will not accept it until the question has been discussed with the Russian and French Governments, so that whatever agreement may be reached may be a quatre.

My Government feel sare that you will explain your views fully to them, and that as the Russian and French Governments have been kept fully informed of what in passing they will be prepared to come to a decision when the need for one arrives.

India Office to Poreign Office. (Received Jonuary 3.)

India Office, January 1, 1910. I AM directed by the Secretary of State for India to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, inviting his views on M. von Gwinner's proposals regarding British participation in the Bagdad Railway.

2. With regard to the general aspects of the proposal, Viscount Morley observes that, whereas what His Majesty's Government contemplated was the construction of the Gulf section by an entirely British company, what is now proposed is two companies, in neither of which British interests will amount to more than 50 per cent. M. Gwinner represents that while the Bagdad company would have no objection to the British interests having a controlling proportion, Hilm Pasha has stipulated that they should be limited to this amount. This is consistent with what is known of the late Grand Vizier's attitude on previous occasions for example, in November last, when, as reported in Mr. Marling's despatch No. 610 of the 16th November last, he had, " in order to block an exclusively British project," proposed to the German Ambassador at Constantinople an Anglo-Franco-German combination. Again, in the discussions on the Lynch concession, references were made to British designs on Mesopotamia; and it seems to Lord Morley that insistence by the Turkish Government on their present attitude would be fatal to British participation, since British capital is hardly likely to be forthcoming on any basis but that of a decisive preponderance of British interest and control.

3. Further, when the construction of the section under British auspices was first advocated, the object in view was the maintenance of British political supremacy in the Persian Gulf and the neighbouring regions. Commercial considerations, though they were not unimportant, and though they have become more important with the prospect of the agricultural development of Mesopotamia, were, and remain, secondary. M. von Gwinner's proposals do not appear to secure to this country that measure of control which is essential to the attainment of the main object of His Majosty's Government. in undertaking these negotiations.

4. If his account of the origin of the proposals is correct, it would seem possible that pressure on the Turkish Government may effect a withdrawal of this objectionable limitation; and Lord Morley connot advise the acceptance of a scheme under which British interests are not so prependerant in the Gulf section as German interests are in the western sections.

5. It is difficult to criticise the financial details of the scheme in the absence of all information as to the real state of the company's profit and loss account. Moreover, the memorandum is very obscure. The clue to the proposals is perhaps to be found in the exchange of views between the Turkish Minister of Finance and M. Kautz, summarised in Mr. Marling's despatch No. 933 of the 24th November. It would then appear that the Germans are seeking a quid pro quo for renomeing their claim to the additional coatons duties at the expense of the Bagolad Gulf section of the lim, which [1723] is to contribute such a lump sum to the parent company as will nominally constitute a reserve fund, but really to be used for the pressing immediate needs of the abnormally expensive Taurus section. This point seems to require careful examination before His Majesty's Government arrive at a final decision as to the additional duties; and the withdrawal of the requirement that the Bagdad Gulf section should contribute 2,000% per kilom, to the parent company might perhaps be made a condition of the abandonment by His Majesty's Government of their present objection to an increase of the customs duties.

6. If this conjecture as to the real nature of the proposal is correct, the inference is that, as matters now stand, the Germans do not see their way beyond Halif; and, if this is so, there is no reason why we should be backward in making counter-proposals. And, in any case, before M. von Gwinner's complicated scheme is accepted, it seems desirable at all events to try to obtain, as the price of our acquiescence in the application of the increased customs duties to the kilometric guarantees for the German section, the acceptance of the simple scheme contemplated by the Ragdad Railway Committee, with the admission of the minimum amount of foreign interest, and, if necessary, on the basis of eventual profit sharing rather than the preliminary payment of a lump sum. Board of Trade to Foreign Office. - (Received January 8.)

Board of Trade, January 7, 1910.

I AM directed by the Board of Trade to acknowledge the receipt of your secret letter of the 29th December, transmitting copy of a letter from Sir E. Cassel with a memorandum of conversations between Herr von Gwinner and Sir E. Cassel with respect to the Bagdad Railway.

In their consideration of the proposals made by Herr von Gwinner, the Board have had the advantage of receiving additional information from Sir II. Babington Smith; and they desire me to offer the following observations for the consideration of

Sir E. Grey :-

1. The Board are strongly of the opinion that the limitation of the British share in the railway south of Bagdad to 50 per cent, would be insufficient, or at least would be considered by critics in this country to be insufficient to secure the undoubted and complete control by British interests which they regard as essential, and that an effort should be made to induce the Turkish Government to consent to an extension of the British share to at least 55 per cent., and if possible to 60 per cent. They understand that Herr von Gwinner would have no objection to this course. Should the Turkish Government be unwilling to consent to the proposal, the same end might perhaps be achieved by transferring the proposed 10 per cent interest of the Anatolian Railway to the new National Bank of Turkey, an Ottoman institution with predominant British control.

2. In view of the considerations urged by Herr von Gwinner, and the fact that the proposal appears to be acceptable to the British financial interests concerned, there does not appear to be any objection to the proposed payment to the Bagdad Railway Company out of the kilometric guarantees of the sum of 2,000t, per kilometre. In the opinion of the Board it would, however, he preferable, if possible, that the subsidy payable by the Turkish Government in respect of the new line should be reduced by the agreed amount, and a corresponding increase made in the amount payable by the Turkish Government to the Bagelad Railway Company in respect of the construction northward of Baydad. This would be a matter for arrangement with the Turkish Government, but it seems desirable that the financial clauses of any agreement which may be made between the British and German groups should be so worded that, whilst onsuring that the Bagelad Railway should receive the increased subvention, the channel through which it should be paid should be left open. The adoption of the course suggested above would avoid giving the impression that, on the one hand, the British enterprise is insisting on a subvention from the Turkish Government which is admittedly excessive having regard to the cost of construction of the Persian Gulf section, and, on the other hand, that it is directly subsidising German enterprise in

3. The Board hope that, in any arrangement made with the German group, it will be clearly understood that the Germans will raise no objection to a subsequent agreement between the British group and the Turkish Government for the variation of the concession in certain important points, e.g.:—

(a) Abragation of the article in the existing convention which prohibits construction southward of Bagdad until the railway has reached that place from the north;

(b) A variation of the route at present indicated; and (c) A variation of the character and gauge of the railway.

4. The Board hope that it may be found possible to arrange that any railway that may be made to Khanikin should join the main line at Bagdad itself, and not at a point further north.

If it should be found necessary in order to obtain Russian consent to the proposed arrangement to agree to Russian construction and control of this branch line, the conditions on which such control should be admitted appear to want careful consideration. One necessary condition would seem to be that working agreements us to rates of charge on the branch line should be arrived at between the Russian and British companies, in order to obviste any danger of British trade with Persia by the new roots being handicapped by heavy charges to the advantage of Russian trade with Persia by the northern frontier.

5. The financial arrangements under the axisting convention, whereby the Turkish Government is bound to pay an excessive constructional subvantion, and is to receive in return an unduly high proportion of the gross receipts, are, in the opinion of the Board, very objectionable. These arrangements impose an altogether excessive burden on the Turkish Government in the event of the line being unsuccessful through had management or otherwise, while, on the other hand, they leave the company with little or no inducement to vigorous and efficient management, since nearly the whole of the fruits of success are allotted to the Turkish Government. The Board therefore suggest that it would be highly desirable, in the interests both of the new company and of the Turkish Government, for the former to consent to take a smaller guarantee on condition that the latter should receive a smaller proportion of the gross earnings. This would, of course, be a matter for direct negociation with the Turkish Government itself, and at the proper time the Board would be propared to offer definite suggestions as to the modifications which seem to them desirable.

No. 4.

Sir Edward Grey to Sir E. Goschen.

(No. 7.)

I HAVE received your telegram of the 14th and your despatch of the 15th ultimo, reporting a conversation you have had with the German Minister for Foreign Affairs respecting the Bagdad Railway. You should inform his Excellency that I am obliged to him for his very frank explanation of the attitude of the German Government towards the participation of His Majesty's Government in the construction and control of the Unit section of the line, although it is somewhat disappointing to learn that even if an agreement were arrived at between the financiers, which was acceptable to His Majesty's Government, the German Government might find it difficult, at any rate at the present time, to confirm it, owing to the opposition which is to be anticipated from German public opinion.

You should remind Herr von Schoen that, so far as His Majesty's Government are aware, it was Herr Gwinner who first approached Sir E. Cassel on the subject of British participation, and that the initiative in no way proceeded from the British group, still less from His Majesty's Government, who have made no move in the matter ance the discussions which took place at Windsor in November 1907. When His Majesty's Government were first informed that Herr Gwinner had made overtures to the British group, the rassumed that the German Government were not unaware of the proposals which had presumably been put forward, after due consideration of the advantages and disadvantages of British participation.

The German Government are aware of the attitude of His Majesty's Government towards the present discussion. Should an agreement be arrived at by the Germans which is in all respects satisfactory to His Majesty's Government, they would be perfectly willing to sanction participation, after due discussion with the Governments of France and Russia, and they would welcome the conclusion of an agreement on a question which has been long outstanding, and which has, they fear, occasioned some soreness of feeling between the two countries.

But the suggestion that the German Government regard British participation in the light of a concession, and that some quid pro quo will be required from the British Government in return, in order to make the arrangement acceptable to the German people, is one which His Majesty's Government cannot entertain.

His Majesty's Government consider that any advantages which may accrue to them from participation in the railway will be more than equally shared by Germany, especially when it is remembered that the consent of His Majesty's Government to the increase of the Turkish customs duties by 4 per cont, would follow upon the conclusion of an agreement, thus imposing for the advantage of the Bagdad Railway, which has a lieu upon the customs revenue, an additional burden upon the foreign trade of Turkey, of which such a large proportion is British.

Public opinion in this country would, it may safely be said, welcome an agreement with Germany on equitable hars, but any attempt on either side to obtain special advantages or to overlead the agreement with extraneous questions might over reach the mark, and, for from improving the feeling between the two countries, react injuriously upon the harmonious relations now existing between the two Governments.

As Herr von Scheen has mentioned the Lynch concession, it may be as well to explain to his Excellency that this question seems to be the subject of some misuador-standing in Germany. British vessels were accorded the right to navigate the Euphrates and Tigris by firmans of 1834 and 1841, and a company was formed by Messra. Lynch in 1862 for the purpose of unvigating these rivers. Ever since that time this firm have maintained their steamers on the rivers. The present negotiation merely relates to the analgumation of Lynch's concession with the Turkish Hamidse Company, and the transformation of what has been an entirely British concession for so long a period into a Turkish company in which Lynch has a share.

No new rights have been acquired. On the contrary, Mr. Lynch is surrendering rights which he has enjoyed many years, and is amalgamating his interests with those of a Turkish company.

It is also to be observed that the contemplated participation of British interests in the Bagdad Railway is not an advantage additional to the Lynch concession, but may possibly impair that concession, and at any rate will be in the same region. Even if the new Lynch concession were granted and a participation of British interests in the Bagdad Railway admitted. Great British would only have a controlling interest in means of communication in which this country has for a long time had a vested interest through the Lynch steamers. Nothing more will have been accomplished than what will have been essential to prevent that long-established interest from being crushed out by new developments.

I am, &c. E. GREY.

No. fa

Memorandum by Sir Edward Grey (communicated privately to Mr. Winston Churchill).

I CANNOT help feeling that we should be careful not to be dragged into the vortex of kilometric guarantees, as established by the convention of 1903, and that it is necessary to put our foot down at once to prevent ourselves being placed in a hopelessly false position in relation to our declared policy of the last few years. Were we to accept any scheme of co-operation in the Bagdad Railway which included participation by this country is the kilometric guarantees under the convention of 1903, it would be almost impossible to defind our action in Parliament against the attacks which would undoubtedly be made on it both there and in the press. There have already been indications in this sense in the press.

To put the matter very briefly, there are, under the convection of 1903, two forms of kilometric guarantees :-

1. A 99 years' annuity to be capitalised and devoted to the construction of the line and the provision of rolling stock; and

2. A genranter for the working expenses.

The construction annuity is fixed at such a figure as to far exceed the cost of building the line and the supply of rolling stock, and to leave large sums for allocation, thus encouraging extravagance and fraudulent finance, as exemplified in the first section.

The guarantee for the working expenses is not conducive to the encouragement and development of traffic, since, owing to the terms in which the concession is drawn up, the most favourable situation for the company, from a financial point of view, would be that there should be the smallest possible amount of traffic, or, better still, none at all.

This brief outline is sufficient to show that the extension of the system of kilometric guarantees is very injurious to the interests of Turkey, since it involves mulching the Turkish tax-payer of sums largely in excess of the actual requirements, while it tends to restrict the development of traffic on the line. These are very serious objections, which have already been recognised as sufficient to justify His Majesty's Government in refusing to participate in the Bagdad Railway scheme on the basis of kilometric guarantees for construction and working expenses.

It is desirable to find a solution of the situation created by Sir E. Cassel's negotiation with Gwinner, which at present involves the system of kilometric guarantees with all its faults and objections.

There are three alternatives to kilometric guarantees :-

(a.) No guarantee at all.
(b.) A British guarantee.
(c.) A Turkish guarantee.

Now as regards the question of constructing the line without any guarantee at all, it is not possible to express an opinion as to whether such a course is possible or not; but I would draw attention to the case of the British Smyrno-Aidin Radway, which, ever since it was constructed in 1850, has been worked without a kilometric guarantee. Naturally all the arreholders of this line are British, and, although an incomparably power country than the Mesopotamian delta is served by it, it has paid a good dividend. If British investors were sufficiently enterprising to find capital for the construction of the Sayras-Aidin Railway, it should not be impossible to and British capital for the construction of the Bagdad section, with all its prospects of irrigation of the adjoining districts.

The second alternative is that of a British guarantee of 3 per cent, on the capital spent on the Gulf section of the line, any caraings above this 3 per cent, being shared equally between the guaranters and the shareholders. This was recommended by Sir James Mackay at the Bagdad Railway Committee of 1907, and subsequently submitted to the Cabinet. Assuming the distance from Bagdad to the Gulf to be 450 miles, and the cost of construction with rolling stock 8,000k a mile, the cost would be 3,600,000k, and the annual guarantee 108,000k, the latter to be shared by the Imperial and Indian Exchequers. It has been stated as an objection to this proposal that the Turks would regard it as a dereliction of their severage rights. It would, however, if that were so, be a dereliction for which they would receive good money value, since they would be relieved of some of the energian conditions of the convention of 1903. I think it not unlikely that they would in the end accept a proposal on these lines if it were put before them, as it undoubtedly could be, in an attractive form.

The other alternative which might be expected to the Turkish Government is that they should themselves give a guarantee. In their case it would have to be one of 5 per cent, on the capital actually expended on the Hagdad-Gulf section, and in return article 35 of the convention of 1903 might, in so far as it relates to this portion of the line, be modified so as to relieve Turkey of both the construction annuity and working expenses guarantee. The gain to the Turkish Exchequer would be considerable, for the following reasons :-

The construction amounty, when capitalised, gives a cash yield of about 8,000 per kilometre. From Bugdad to Koweit the distance is about 716 kilom., making the amount payable as interest by Turkey (viz., 5 per cent. on 8,500), × 716, or on 6,080,000). 301,300, and this amount of interest would be subject to reduction only by the operation of the sinking fund, which is spread over the whole duration of the concession.

The working expenses guarantee is not a fixed charge, but it might at its maximum amount reach 4,500 fr. per annum per kilometre, which, for 716 kilom, works out at 128,880% a-Jews.

The hability of Turkey in respect of the 716 kilom, from Bagdad to Koweit would [1728]

thus, under the concession of 1903, be a sum not exceeding 304,300L a-year in respect of construction guarantees, and, if the working expenses guarantee were added, it might reach 433,180L

On the other hand, the 5 per cent, guarantee on the capital of 3,600,000k (which, assuming 5,000k, per kilometre, would be the approximate cost of constructing and financing rolling stock for 716 kilom.) would be only 180,000k, plus, say, 20,000k for bankers' charges, &c., if that were necessary, making 200,000k in all—the maximum annual limbility of Turkey, and, which is an important point, this hability would not continue for 96 years, but it would cease as soon as the radway realised a net profit of 5 per cent. While Turkey would share equally in any profits over and above this 5 per cent. It would be almost incredible that she should refuse a modification in this section.

There yet remains the point of the 2,000 per kilometre which Gwinner demands should be paid to the Bagdad Railway Company from the construction guarantee for the Bagdad-Gulf section. We need not trouble about this, as it should form a subject of agreement directly between Gwinner and the Turkish Government, and need not be in any way connected with our own negotiations with the latter

The Foreign Office memorandum of the 4th June, 1907, of which copies were given to the French and Russian Governments, represents the athtade which we should points in it which might be modified, but, as a whole, our policy should remain

michanged,

I have noticed in Sir E. Cassel's memorandum that no mention is made of the parts which are to be constructed at Bagdad, Busiorah, and Koweit. It may be resumed that, if the Gulf section is to be under our construction and control, the inding of the ports on that section would be instirally included. It is very desirable that there should be no doubt upon that point, and the fact must not be overlooked that we are paying 4,000k a year to the Sheikh of Koweit, precisely in order to control the terminum of the line. It might therefore be as well to stip thate that the terminum should actually be there and under our control being in British hands, but no attempt is made to show how this proportion should be permanently so secured. The following is a suggestion which has been made to me, and which, I think, is worth considering :-

The bonds for the Raplad Gulf section may be issued to the investing public at, say i or the land of t

M. Pichon observed to me that the French Government had all along been in favour of the internationalisation of the railway. Before he left Paris ten days ago for a boliday, he had informed the Ottoman Bank that he considered that when Mr Gwinner came to Pans to negotiate with French financiers the bank representatives should listen to Mr Gwinner's proposals and report them to the French Government, but should not commit themselves in any way. If, M. Pichon said to me, the Franch financiers accepted terms not approved by the French Government, the loan would not be allowed a quotation on the Paris market.

The information which M. Pichon had in regard to the negotiations between Sir Ernest Cassel and the Deutsche Bank was that the conditions offered by Mr. Gwinner, viz., a 50 per cent. British participation in the Bagdad to the Persian Gulf section of the railway, were not at all acceptable to His Majesty's Government.

Enclosure 1 in No. 6.

Memorandum by Mr. Masling.

Observations on the Bases of Negotiation proposed by Dr. A. von Gwinner to Sir E. Camel for British Participation in the Bagdad Railway Concession.

THE bases proposed by Dr. von Gwinner are really four in number and in essentials are the following:--

1. That the provisions of the existing Bagdad Radway shall be maintained practically unaltored;

2. That a company, in which Great Britain should have a 50 per cent interest, shall be formed for the construction and working of the Begdari-Persian Gulf section:

3. That out of the construction losis required for those sections a sum representing 2,000%, per kilom, shall be coded by the new company to the Bagdad Radway Company, which previous necessarily angles that the former (or Brown, company will not abandon the Turkish Government's guarantee for the interest on these losis and

4. That the consent of the Turkish Government be obtained to the arrangement.

Looking at the question from a purely local standpoint it is safe to my that if the same is the same that Branch and appoint on a Turkey, and it may be predicted with confidence that the Turketh Government will refuse to manetion the scheme.

In the first phose the formation of value of the state of

than that they should exist, and that those who hold them abould pride themselves on their political againty, while as for eradicating them, it need only be said that there is only one thing more difficult than getting an idea into a Turk—and that is to get one out.

Independent evidence of the existence of this feeling will be found in Mr Consulting on the visit of Dr. Nazim and Rusa Towfik Beys to Budspest, be recounted that these gentlemen, in speaking of the external affairs of Turkey, commenced by ments of the Lynch case furnish audicient testimony of the case with which the Turkish suspicious can be played on. It is of course not beyond the bounds of possibility that it is a first than the later of t

It M as (I'), and the remotive that the negotiations were proceeding on these lines were causing the gravest disquestude here.

Next, there is the question of the governness. If the stipulations of the axisting concession are to be maintained, as the memorandum implies, the new British company will enjoy guarantees both for the interest on the construction loans and for the working expenses. What will be the effect of such a proposition on the Turks! To say the least of it, we should in their eyes stand convicted of the most flagrant inconsistency. Not only has the embessy, under instructions, someled the Porte as to the saturd, Not only has the embessy, under instructions, someled the Porte as to the saturd of a convession for a malway (to compete with or be a substitute for the German whild line), without guarantees of any kind, but we have made a condition of our assent to the increase of the import duties that the product of such increase shall not be applied to now individe guarantees, and in the subsequent negotiations we have never concessed, or rather we have openly avowed, that our object in doing so was to block the Bagried Radway. We have in fact, both as a general principle and in specific instances, steadinstly set our faces against the whole system of kilometric guarantees, and yet we are now being asked to claim them for ourselves in respect of a section of railway against the completion of which we have been consistently and strenuously working for years post

To the Turks this colle-face will be worse then inconsistency - it will be treachery. There has been much wild talk by unauthorised persons of our benevolent intentions towards Turkey in connection with this matter, and public opinion behaves that our opposition to the Bagdad Rudway is at least as much inspired by a wish to relieve the country of a burthensome engagement as by the necessity of defending our own interests, both commercial and political, in those regions. If Bagdad Railway Convention as it stands, would not the Turks conclude that our had been purely factious, inspired by chagrin at being excluded from a " - re in the plunder," while naturally their ampioions as to our designs on Mesopotamia would be redoubled? The case would even be worse than this, for we should presumably ask for the cancellation of that part of article 29, which stipulates that, so long as the main line between Konia and Bagdad is not complete, no part of the Bagelad Busnorah section that may have been built may be opened for traffic. Now this article was framed at the desire of the Turks, so that, so far from obtaining any modification of the axisting conditions in their favour, we should be whing them to forego one of their own desiderate,

In those architectures what shred of crods for disinterestedness would be left us with the Turks? What chance could there be of their consenting to the arrangement contemplate?

Les la ogeney so emmently pleasing to be bir fernest Cased On the ways consistently harped upon the Mesopatamu, and it is quite conceivable that he idle to pretend that he and the German Embassy nere are not quite alive to the loss of credit and influence which must result to us should we consent to negotiate on the proposed lasses.

It is also worth while considering what the effect of abortive negotiations on these lines would be on the prospects of the completion of the Bagdad Railway by the Germans alone. It is safe to say that they would be improved, for the Turks would be disposed to discount our opposition as marely serials and not based on any belief in the substant dements of the scheme. At present we hold a strong position, but as time gives on our position is likely, so far an can be seen, to grow would rather than stronger. In Color, for instance, are still suffering from the odays of their profit disc attimety we have an our veto on the application of any new customs duties to railway guarantees, or rather, how long such voto will be effective, as the Ottoman Government may in a few years be this to supply the required sum from the surplus revenues of the Detto; while it must further be remembered that our strongest weapon of all—the problem to quote linguish Railway shares on the Paris Bourse—is in the hands of the French Government, and circumstances might arms in which it might feel constrained to authorise the quotation.

If, then, the bases proposed by the Germans for our participation in the enterprise of the question arises whether some combination is not feasible, and of the many that have been sketched the three following seem to be the best worthy of consideration:—

The first is that we should participate on satisfactory terms in the Baydad Railway as a whole. It may be possible that some arrangement could be found to effect that ight the objections seem to be insurmountable. In the first place, the tis understood, opposed to the proposal, and in the second, if we are to escape the charge of inconsistency as above explained, radical modifications in the financial interests of Turkey would have to be made, to which the Germans could not agree.

the second combination is the project advocated by Mr. Edwin Whettai, and, like the former, would have the meatimable advantage of conclusing Betish and German 17.

briefly that, instead of carrying on the railway from its present head at Bulgurla with the normal gauge, a narrow gauge line should be built on the existing trace with branches northward to Samsoon and north-east to Erzeroum, thus opening out the whole of Asia Menor. Mr Whittall gives figures to show that the total annuaties partly for the existing Record for the second for t kilometric guarantees on construction loans would suffice to provide the capital required for the whole of this narrow gauge system, and he argues with much force that the change of gauge is not really a matter of importance. The undertaking would be " internationalised."

His memorandum, however, though brief, explains the outlines and arguments in favour of the scheme with so much clearness that it may eafely be left to speak for steelf, but it is necessary to point out the circumstances which militate against it, vis., that the Turkish staff is strongly opposed to the change of gauge; that the scheme has been coldly received by Dr. von Gwinner; that there would be great difficulty in fixing the respective proportion of control, &c., among the Powers interested, that the Turkish Government seems to be already in treaty with a Franco-Russian group for the projected Samsoon Sivas Railway, which would have to be incorporated in the new system; and that it is doubtful whether the Russian Government would view are approval a proposal which would bring the frontier fortress of Erzeroum into communication with the rost of the Empire.

The third alternative is for an Eoglish or Angle-French group to obtain a concession for the cultway advocated by Sir William Willcooks from Home to Bage ...... and thence to Bussorsh and the gulf without guarantees of any kind whatever from Turkey. The deficulties standing in the way of realising this scheme are great. It put for a street to get the street of the regard it as a declaration of renewed war, and who might be expected to play to the ntimest on the Turkish superstition concerning our Mesopotamian designs; it may, however be anticipated that their efforts in this direction would not need with so success as usual as the prospect of seeing Syria and Mesopotamia Paked by recent would sertainly prove an attractive but to the Arab and Syrian parties, to my thing of the inducement held out to the nation at large in the shape of a railway. which without any financial burthen on the Treasury would do for it nearly all that the German Lagdad achoms promises at an enormous cost. But there is another chatacle, viz., the difficulty of finding the requisite capital E, Er & Kg . . In . . . . . . . Half & Garret a. s guarantee from His Migesty's Government would, if publicly known (as printed out in et 1 1, C ) colony N ,, I c 1 probably prove far the street of the first the firs to the season of the season to the season the The state of the s The second secon No Part of the State of the Sta Alternative testing and the state of the A PERSONAL PROPERTY OF I to the property of the same If we talk about the state of t Without I south I get I have a second t . . . but always provided

But even in these erroumstances, it is evident that it will be no easy matter to find a group of capitalists able and willing to sevest a large amount of capital without any principles, and with the prospective profits, considerable as they probably would be, dent on the capacity and energy of the Turkish Government to execute and work a large and complex scheme of uragation. In London the interest taken in Turkish affairs appears to be so langued that a purely British group-even if it were deprableis probably an impossibility, and if co-operation is to be sought it will probably be most eat, all the same to be a second to be a leak

In space of these difficulties it would, it is suggested, be our heat policy to make the acquaitum of a Home Bagdad-Gulf Radway concession our immediate objective, and to decline Dr. Gwinner's proposals. If we can accure it, we should realise all our aims-except that of conclusing Bratish and German interests in Turkey-we should have a fair opportunity of bringing about the fusion of British and French financial interests, which M. Pichon's recent speech in the Chamber shows would be welcome in Paris, and we should be in a position, while satisfying Russia, to safeguard our monopoly of transit trude via Bagdad to Persia. Moreover, the Homs-Bagdad-Gulf scheme is the one which apparently has caused the greatest magivings to the Gormans, and there is every prospect that if we made it our avowed policy to carry it through, the Germans would accept any reasonable terms that we might formulate in our own and Turkish interests as a condition of our participation in the Bagdad Railway.

Enclosure 2 in No. 8.

Memorandum by Mr. II hittall,

A Solution of the Raydad Radway Question Broad Lines and Objects of the Schome.

A CHANGE from normal gauge to narrow gauge (1:05 metre) of the whole railway system from Bulgurlu (the present terminus of the line; to Bugdad and on to the Persian Gulf, and the extension of this merow gauge system by a new line from Alexandretta on the south, to the Black Sea, at Samsoon, on the north, and to Eczeronm on the cast, thus opening up the whole of Ama Minor.

2. The transfer to the extended narrow gauge system of the total lump sum which would have been payable to the Bugded line union its present convention in annuties for the service of construction loans.

3. An equitable and saturfactory regulation of the kilometric guarantees per kilometre for working expenses.

4. A change in the conditions regarding curves and gradients, speed, &c., and also with respect to the division of the gross recorpts over the minimum guaranteed so as to further kilometric guarantees required to complete the present line to the Person Gulf

7. The settlement of all international jealousies under a participation by England and France in the extended project, and the consequent emission on the Paris and London markets of the serip of the various loans which will be issued

Proposed Narrow Gauge Lanes.

(a.) From Bulgurlu to Adams, Alexandretta, and Aleppo, and thence along the the Euphrates to Bagdad, and thence to Khanikin on the Persian frontier. Total, about 2,280 kiloin.

b) A new line from Alexandrotta to Tell Habesh, Ourfa, and the Harran district, and thence northwards, vol. Arghans, Kharpout, Sivas, to Samsoon (about 1,050 kilom.), with a branch line from Kharpout to Erzeroum (about 270 kilom.). Total, about

Hence the total length of the whole of the proposed lines would be about 3,600 kilem.

LENOTE of lines (obligatory) under the present Bagdad Convention, to which annuation and kilometric guarantees have been assigned Rutgarlu to St Held Tel Habreh to Aisppo-- V Zoner to Kewert.

Annualy Payable by Turkey on the Construction Cost of the above 2,500 kilom. Normal Gauge Lane under the Terms of the Bagdad Convention.

The ninety-nine year annuity, guaranteed to the Bagdad Railway Company for them in payment for the construction of the line, is fixed at 11,000 fr. per kilometre constructed. Hence the nominal price to be paul by the Turkish Government in scrip at par for the construction of each kilometre works out at 269,111 fr.

It follows therefore-to the first that the 2,500 kilom (2,500 kilom ) 269 111 fr ) is 672,777,000 fr.

be realised in each from the scrip delivered by Turkey in payment of the construction cost would be 269,111 fr. or 80 = 213,289 fr per kilometro, or 538,222,500 fr for the whole 2,500 kilom.

Repartation of the above found Annuity of 27,500,000 fr. over the 3,000 kilom of the Proposed Enlarged Narrow Gauge System.

This mann minimity of 27,500,000 fr divided over 3,500 kilom, would yield 7,639 fr. per known.

An annuity of 7,639 fr. espendised on the basis of 4 per cent. interest and '087538 making fund would yield 186,880 fr

This sum would be payable by the Turkush Government in scrip at par for each telemetre.

The admission under the proposed scheme of this scrip on Paris and London markets would coulde it to be placed at fully 31 points advance, or my at 831

The each yield at 83} per cent of 186,880 ft, in scrip would be 156,045 per kilomotro available for construction purposes.

Comparative Capital in Cash to be Provided by the Turkish Government for Construction per kilometer under the two Schemes.

Under the Bagdad convention 2,500 kilom, narrow gauge, 215,289 fr. per kilom, Under the extended system 3,600 kilom, narrow gauge, 156,045 fr. per kilom, With the above data before us we can the more easily look into the financial aspects.

It must be understood that there is no pretence that the estimates given herein, or the figures on which calculations are based, are correct. They should be quite sufficiently mean the mark, however, to permit of fairly reliable deductions and the cost, and therefore reduce the profits to be earned on the construction contract price of 215,280 fr. per kilometre.

Further, the unfavourable division of the gross receipts over 4,500 fr per kilometre, though it may not be felt for many years to come, is undoubteally a consideration which ought to be provided for by some sort of reserve fund to be taken out of the original construction profits.

We shall probably be not far from the truth if we put down the average cost of 2,500 at 140,289 fr. per kilom, and the average profit to be made on the construction at 75,000 fr. per kilometre

From this profit we must deduct at least 10,000 fr. per kilometre for the reserve fund immediately above referred to, leaving 65,000 net fr. profit per kilometre on

2,500 kilom., or in all (65,000 x 2,500) 162,500,000 fr

The cost of the Bagdad convention normal gauge line is estimated above at 140,289 fr. per kilometre. The saving in cost between such a line and a narrow gauge line under normal conditions has been put down at about 20 per cent. or (on 140,289 fr.) 28,062 per kilometre. This gives us a compositive figure of 112,227 fr. as the cost per kilometre of the narrow gauge line.

The sum available for construction of the 3,600 kilom, has already been shown to be 156,045 fr per kilometre. Hence the probable profit on the 3,600 kilom, of narrow gauge line would be :-

Contract price				41			F1, 180,045 112,227
	(3)						. L =1H

Or at 8,000 kilom, 158,648,000 fr. total profit.

The comparison of total estimated profit therefore works out -- lad.

On the present Haplad line	 4.4	+5	4.4	142,500,000
On the perpassed narrow gauge system	4.4	14		150,445,000

The difference is quite assignificant.

N.B.—Under the extended scheme, the conditions as to curves and gradients, speed, &c., will be less contly, and a working basis of 20 per cent, of the gross receipts over the guaranteed minimum will render it unnecessary to place any part of the construction profits into reserve, as in the case of the Bagdad convention.

We have tried to show in the preceding lines that the probable profits on the

entimated to result from the present normal gauge line

Let us now compare the two schemes from the point of view of the probable results to be derived from the actual working of the lines.

Under the Bagdad convention the Government guarantees as average minimum of 4,500 ft per kilometra of grow receipts. Any deficiency has to be paid to the company at the end of each year in codi.

All green receipts over 4,500 fr. up to 10,000 fr. average per knowneste go to the Government. Over 10,000 fr. 60 per cent. goes to the Government, 40 per cent. to the company. This implies that when the receipts average 10,000 fr. the company cent. of the green takings! Over 10,000 fr., the company's margin for working necessitates the putting aside as a reserve final of 10,000 fr. out of the construction to the proviously referred to. The proposal under the new scheme is that the Government's guarantee minimum of green receipts for working expenses should be reduced to 4,000 fr. average per kilometre on the 3,600 kilometres. That the green receipts over 4,000 fr. up to 8,000 fr. should go to the Government, and that any and the Government. In this way the company would always have a 50 per cent. minimum of the green receipts for working expenses and profit.

Would the exploiting company be a loser by the change from 4,500 fr. for normal

2 to 4,000 fr. for narrow gauge !

No; for the cost of working and upkeep, including interest on rolling stock and depreciation, would be fully 500 fr. less per kilom, for the narrow gauge line.

Would the Turkush Government be a loser or a gainer by guaranteeing 4,000 fr. over 3,600 kilom., as compared with 4,500 fr. over 2,500 kilom?

[1723]

Undoubtedly a gainer, as whether the gross receipts are above (1), or below (2)

the guaranteed average minimum.

1. Under the new scheme the Government receives the surplus over 4,000 fr. from 3,600 kilom, of line, whereas in the Bagdad convention it receives the surplus over 4,500 fr. on only 2,500 kilom, of line. The advantage is clear.

2. Let us consider the case of the average receipts over both systems being on'v 3. 0 fr per k on. The very the world visit to the contract at the color of the year under the Bagdad convention 4,500 fr.—3,000 fr., i.e., 1,500 per kilom. 2,500 kilom. X 1,500 fr. equals 3,750,000 fr.

Under the new scheme the result would be that the Government would have to pay 4,000 fr.—3,000 fr., i.e., 1,000 fr. per kilog. or 3,600 kilog. at 1,000 fr. equals 3,600,000 fr.

Thus on a very low basis of the average gross receipts the cost to the Turkish Government us for the talkship and the amount of the latest of

It will be argued that the narrow gauge system breaks the continuity of the through land to be a first the land to be a would interfere with through traffic, entail delays and extra expense for transhipment, and, lastly, that a double supply of rolling stock will be necessitated.

At first eight these objections may appear to be really serious, but a careful study of the actual conditions will soon desupate this fear. A glance at the map will show that the Taurus constitutes, so to say, a trade water shed south and north.

All produce must inevitably trend towards the nearest scaport, and the nearest port to the consuming centre must receive the imports. The southern Taurus and all the eastern trade must find its outlet and inlet by the Mediterranean or Persan Guif, and the northern Taurus trade by Smyran or the Marmons.

No through goods traffic worth speaking of can over exist from south of the Taurus to north, nor from north to south.

The change of gauge, therefore, at Bulgurlu could not have any ecrous consequence commercially in that nature has already laid her veto on a through goods traffic. There would be no delay of through military or passenger traffic, which undoubtedly would be considerable both wave. A transfer from train to train would be a question of minutes only, and the movement of troops would not be retarded.

Annahar a front reserve and there are a god to a confidence how it will really be a source of extra expense or a drawback in any way.

In the first place, there is no through goods traffic which would have constituted a drawback had it existed.

Secondly, central and castern Asia Minor can only be opened up by means of a trivial and a substant of the substant of the whole network of milways east of Konich and Bulgurlu, comprising northmental in the substant Asia Minor line would remain normal gauge. If the Bulgurlu-lamb line were built normal gauge there would be a much more conous break of contrary it the particular the return of the substant line of normal gauge. Natural conditions seem to have marked out Bulgurlu as the best spot for a change.

The centre of the narrow gauge system would hest be at Alexandretta, a port in their requirements. The eastern narrow gauge network will in like manner possess its own.

through don't Been the Const Present to

would be rather a sentimental than a real obstacle.

It could not interfere with a through goods traffic which never would exist. Nor would the necessity of a separate rolling stock be of any draw-back or extra expense.

We have so far tried to tabulate and explain away the objections which might be advanced against the new scheme. Its evident advantages are more easily grasped

1. Turkey would secure the opening up of Asia Minor and Mesopotamia by one connected system, north, south, and cast. The commercial, strategical, and political importance to the Government, and to the people is incalculable.

It would be attained free of any extra cost to the nation beyond the engagements already assumed under the Regdad convention. Agriculture and commerce would take rapid strides. The increase of the strides and of the customs receipts would be a net-profit to the nation, and rapidly belp to swell the revenues. And lastly the opening up of the rich districts of Asia Minor would bring about much more rapidly than with the present Bagdad line, the increase of the gross receipt which eventually will relieve the nation of the kilometric annuities and guarantees already incurred under the Bagdad convention. The strategic and administrative importance of the scheme is too manifest to necessitate our dwelling upon it. Communication will be established by rail from west to cost and south and north, and to the furthest corners of the Empire.

2. We have shown that Germany would not suffer financially either as regards construction profits or on the eventual working of the line.

The clauses and conditions of the Bagdad convention would be applied in their entry to the same and to the modifications which are suggested herein, redivision of surplus plus receipts, &c.

The unification under one management and control of the whole network of railways in Asiatic Turkey and Mesopotamia must be of the highest importance to

Germa

2. The enlarged scheme would render a settlement of participations for England and France much more easy, and put an end to international pealousies

4. An arrangement could be come to with Russia, under which she takes an interest in the Sivas-Samsoon section.

5. Even if an arrangement with England were come to regarding the present lagrant who have the present that Tirks at the contact the known is supported by the contact that the contact th

But if the commercial and strategical benefits of the new scheme were put in the balance, it would be so manifestly to her advantage that she probably would willingly make the accountry financial exercices.

Memorandum respecting the Baydad Radway, 1909.

CONTRNIS.

IN the spring of 1900 the Bagdad Radway question was briefly in the following state .-

The Bagdad Radway Company had secured by their Convention of June 1904 with the Turkish Government a Lon on the surplus of the eeded retenues to furnish the kilometric guarantees by which the milway was to be continued beyond Boulgourlon. It did not appear likely that any surplus would be available in the near future unless the ceded revenues were augmented by an increase of the Turkish customs, nor was it probable that the Turkish Government would be induced without the greatest difficulty to plodge other revenues for the benefit of the milway.

The Turkish Ambassador in Lordon had in November 1908 intimated to His Majesty's Government the Porte's desire to raise the Turkish customs duties from 11 per cent, to 15 per cent, and he had been informed that the ament of His Majesty's Government to that course would only be given if leyoted to any existing enterprise. This undertaking, Rifnet Pasha said, To Skeet Pasks

Inches to a state part of said

The questions of the customs increase and of the Bagelad Railway had 1908, become indissolubly bound up together owing to the hen on the surplus of the ceded revenues secured by the Bagdad Radway Company. When, therefore, it became evident that the Turkish Government would shortly upply officially for the concent of His Majosty's Government to the increase of the duties from 11 per cent. to 15 per cent., and as there appeared to be no intention on the part of Germany to invite British participation in any form in the railway, it became a question whether it would not be necessary to use the customs incresse as a lever with which, if possible, to bring about a solution of the Bagdad Railway question satisfactory to His Majesty's terrand there is wish as and disserted in solution, such as participation in the Bagdad Railway Concession by scouring Tigris Vallet I fresh to the strain of the Gelf series of Railway the railway. His Majosty's Government should only accept the proposed customs increase if they should receive a Concession for a railway from the Persian Gulf to Bussorah and Bagdad along the valley of the Tigris, with the option to prolong it along the valley of the Euphrates to Tripoli or some other port on the Meditermacan; the construction of such a line to be carried out without any Turkish kilometric guarantee. Djarnd Bey. May 27 1900.

At the end of May an official request was received from the Turkish Government for His Majesty's Government's assent to the increase by 4 per cent, of the Turkish customs duties. The Turkish Charge d'Affaires' note alluded to the financial difficulties of his Government, from which relief could only be found by the proposed measure; alinded to the undertaking already go a by the Turkish Amhassahar that the proceeds of the increase would he kept free from any existing lien; and stated that the German and Austran G v caucets L d decady assented to the increase.

Emphrates Valley Sie to Lowther No. 275, May 25.

A the same on accessore we see years to Lowther, enclosing a report from His Majorty v Course tracers at its goal in which the latter advocated, as the most important de the fun of Br st. policy in Miso potamin and the adjacent regions, the acquisition of a Common for a railway directly connecting Bagdad with the Mediterranean at Alexandretta vià the Euphrates Valley and Aleppo. Colonel Romany pointed out that the financial regeneration of Turkey is dependent on the development of Mesopotamia; that the progress of that region is held back by the deficient means of communication; and that irrigation in Mesopotamia and development of railways must go hand in hand together. Assuming that the Bagdau Railway would some day be built along the trace of 1908, and viewing the matter from the purely commercial point of view, Colonel Ramsay argued that a railway in British hands up the Euphrates Valley from Bagdad to the Mediterranean through Aleppo would furnish the best means of protecting British interests in Mesopotamia against foreign competition. The railway from Bagdad to the Parsian Gulf he regarded as important, but less important than the line to the Mediterranean. He regarded it as most urgent that the Turkish Government should retain freedom of action and equality of rates for all parties on the Aleppo-Alexandretta section, pointing out that if the German Bagdad Railway Company were to scoure control of this section they could, by imposing maximum rates on goods reaching Aleppo via the Euphrates line, nullify all the advantage the latter would obtain over the Bagdad line by means of its shorter length. On this point Sir G. Lowther in his covering despatch,

- "I am not convinced that this apprehension is well grounded. The German Company possessors its preference for the line connecting An pice with one sea only the line of the price sin it regards of the Damaseus - Hamah - Biredjik Railway are respected (see Young's 'Corps de Droit Ottoman,' vol. iv, pp. 166-7 and 228). Now, supposing the French Company is willing to cede its right, it seems to use certain that whatever other conditions they may attach to the Agreement, they would certainly stipulate for favourable treatment in tariff matters for themselves, and in such case it is hard to conceive that the Turkish Government would not majst on equally favourable treatment for any radway starting from Aleppo for which they might grant a Concession. Thus, though no doubt serious, I doubt whether the competition of the Rugund Railway would be as formidable as Cotonel Ramsay anticipates, especially when the advantage which the Ruphrates Valley line would possess in its shorter route is taken into account."
- Sir G. Lowther, however, recognized how desirable it was that the Aleppo-Alexandretta metson should be in more friendly hands than those of the Bugdad Emilea, Company, and he also pointed to the fact that the French houses interested in Turkish milways do not always adopt the policy advocated by the French Government.

There were thus three alternative schemes towards the attainments of which His Majesty's Government might turn their endeavours

1. Participation in the existing Concession in such a manuer as to secure to Great Britain the construction and control of the Gull section of the railway up to Bagdad, and if possible further north to Mosul.

2. The construction of a railway from the Personn Gulf to Bagdad via the Tigris, if necessary in competition with the German line; with the option of extending the railway up the Euphrates Valley to the Mediter-

3. The scheme advocated by Colonel Ramsay, who haves ready on inversion of 2, viz., the construction of a railway from Alexas metra to Aleppo, and by the Euphrates River to Bagdad; with the possibility of extending it southwards to the Persian Gulf as a matter of less urgent

Lowther, No. 245. August 18, 1909.

It was decided to separate the two questions of oustoms increase and Railway Concessions, and Sir G. Sir G. Lowther. No. 746, Second. September 14.

After some delay caused by Cabinet changes in Turkey, Sir G. Lowther carried out his instructions in conversation with the Grand Visier. His Highness expressed himself as personally favourable to the proposal, and said he would confidentially consult his colleagues. He pointed out that the grant of such a Concession would be deeply resented by Germany, and that lurkey would have to rely more than ever on Great Britain to help her out of auch difficulties.

On the same day the Turkish Ambassador in London communicated to the Secretary of State a Memorandum again pressing His Majesty's Government to assent to the proposed increase of the customs duties. The Memorandum described the argent necessity under which the link of Government found themselves of increasing their revenues were the various solumes of reforms to which those revenues were to be devoted. It amo contained the following assurance '-

"Il est bien entendu que les sommes provenant de cette majoration ne seront point affectées à des entroprises dans lesquelles le Gouvernement Impérial se trouve dojà engagé, et nommément su Chemin de Por de Bagdad."

The Memorandum handed to Towilk Pashn, in reply, stated clearly the terms on which His Majorty's Government would consent to the proposed incremo. These were:-

I. Removal of contrictions on the horrowing powers of Egypt. 2. With respect to the Bagded Railway, the following statement was made :-

"His Majesty's Government take note of the undertaking given by the the reservoir of the seal of their new Chainer given to the levy of an additional 4 per cent, import duty on British trade, the proceeds of this surfax will not be devoted to the Bagdad Bail way. They are, however, of opinion that, in order to remier this panage effective, it will be necessary that the Sublime Ports should obtain from the German Government an assurance of their willingness to waive their right to any of the proceeds from the mustoms increase for the sections of the Bagdad Railway now in course of construction or to be constructed in the future. 3. If a loan were mised on the proceeds of the increase, at least onethird of it should be placed on the London market, the conditions being equally favourable with those offered elsewhere.

The Secretary of State at the same time made some remarks to the Lowder, No. 298, Ambassador on the subject of Concessions in Turkey :--September 10.

"I said at the same time that I was anxious to draw his Excallency's serious attention to some other points of considerable importance, in addition to those mentioned in the Memorandum. His Excellency would recognize that under the old régime British trade and enterprise in Turkey had met with marked hostility on the part of the Palace. Since the institution of the new regime requests for Concessions for railways, for navigation, and for working petroleum had been submitted to the Sublime Porte by His Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople without the impesition of terms which could in any way be regarded as operous or disadvantageous to Turkey. The Ottoman Government had in this magner an opportunity of repairing the injustice inflicted on British trade in the part, and, in view of the support which His Majesty's Government had given to the new regime from the very first, and especially during the crisis of the past winter, they hoped that this opportunity would not be lost, and that the Ottoman Government would now be able to grant some reciprocity of treatment. I added that the adoption by the Porte of a favourable attitude towards these matters would have considerable influence with His Majesty's Government in their eventual decision on the question of the 4 per cent. tuereaso."

Sir G. Lowther was authorized to discuss the question of the customs stress on the lines of the Memorandam and of the verbal statement made to the Turkish Ambassadoz.

Meanwhile there were signs that the Turkish Government had been impressed by the British application to build an independent railway from the Persian Gulf to Bagdad. The Grand Virier complained of the expense Str G. Lowther, a narrow gauge line built. He expressed bimself in favour of an arrange. "to .. t. and ment being come to between the Germans and the English for the construction of the remaining sections, and said he had instructed Mahmaud Shefket Pasha to approach the German Ambasador on the subject. He had, in order to block an exclusively British project, suggested to the German Andansador whether the German Railway Company would not be disposed to form a combination for the last acction of the railway with Prouch and English concessionnaires. Baron Macchall said that he had no objection to such a combination, provided that no further difficulties were missed in regard to the Boulgourloudiff metion. It was therefore impossible for us to agree to the increase of the Turkish customs duties unless we had proper safegazers go at the recof the ado to ado to recent for the purpose I . placing British trade in Mesopotamus. We felt that we must either have a part in the Bagdad Railway itself, or else we must have a Concession which would enable us to establish other means of communication by which we could trade with Mesopotamia on equal terms.

> "I told Count Metternich that my object in giving these explanations to the German Government was to prove to them that our action was not dictated by ill-will to Germany, but by the necessities of the case, and that the attitude we were obliged to take up with regard to the increase of the Turkish customs duties was not an attitude taken up behind the back of the German Government in a way to cause irritation and introduce friction into what we hoped would be a friendly discussion."

The Secretary of State pointed out that one of the difficulties in the way of a settlement was that Russ an as will as Freigh co-operat as must be mvited.

"As regards Russia, the position was this: We had on previous occasions been instrumental, or been supposed to be instrumental, in defeating the Russian plans for securing outlets on the sea, first in the case of the Mediterranean, and then in the case of the Far Enet; this had caused much ill-will in Russia towards us. Now we bud succeeded in overcoming the ill-will, and I was very anxious not to revive it as regards the one remaining outlet which Russia was thought to desire—the Parman Gulf—by participating in the Bagdad Radway, when Russia was opposed to it and excluded from it. I had told the Russian Government more than once that I thought they ought not to oppose, in principle, the construction of the Reed of Ruthery but a git a stead to make up their maids as to the terms on which they could join in the project. I did not think it would be impossible for the German Government to overcome this difficulty of Russian opposition; indeed, I knew that before the visit of the German Emperor to this country Herr von Schoen had spoken to the Russian Government on the subject."

During Sir E. Cassel's visit to Berlin to meet Dr. Gwinner and discuss Sir E. Goschen. a scheme of British participation in the Bagdad Railway, Herr von Schoen December 15, referred to the question in conversation with Sir E. Goschen.

"He said that he and d speak to me quite frankly and loyalty upon this subject. It was quite possible that Sir E. Cassel and Herr Gwinner might come to a satisfactory agreement, as isr as the commercial interests involved in the question was concerned, but, as he would have me to understand, it did not follow that the Imperial Government would see their way to confirming such an Agreement, at all events at once. He did not wish me to think that the Government had any objection to British participation, because that was by no means the case. But public opinion in Germany would be up in arms and make things very unpleasant for the Imperial Government unless the latter could show that there was some return for what they would certainly regard as a Concession. The so-called Lynch monopoly would add fuel to the flame, and there would certainly be a universal cey that German interests were being sacrificed with nothing to show on the credit. side of the account.

In replying to this despatch, His Majesty's Government took strong To Str E. was instructed to point out that the advances in the poster of British January 10, 1910. was instructed to point out that the advances in the matter of British participation had proceeded from the German side, and that-

"the suggestion that the German Government regard British participation in the light of a Concession, and that some quid pro quo will is required from the British Government in return, in order to make the arrangement acceptable to the German people, is one which His Majesty's Government cannot entertain,

"His Majesty's Government consider that any advantages which may accrue to them from participation in the railway will be more than equally shared by Germany, especially when it is remembered that the consent of His Majesty's Government to the increase of the Turkish customs duties by 6 per cent, would follow upon the conclusion of an Agreement, thus imposing for the advantage of the Bagdad Railway, which has a lien upon the customs revenue, an additional burden upon the foreign trade of Turkey, of which such a large proportion is British.

· It is also to be observed that the contemplated participation of British interests in the Bagdad Bailway is not an advantage additional to the Lynch Concession, but may possibly unpair that Concession, and at any rate will be in the same region. Even if the new Lynch Concession were granted and a participation of British interests in the Bagdad Railway admitted, Great Britain would only have a controlling interest in means of communication in which this country has for a long time had a vested interest through the Lynch steamers. Nothing more will have been accomplushed than what will have been essential to prevent that longestablished interest from being crushed out by new developments."

Ricaria.

On the 15th November the Report of Sir H. Bahington Smith's converestion with Dr. Gwinner was received in London, and on the 18th November His Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh was instructed by telegraph to communicate its substance to the Russian Government, and to ascertain their views as to participation in the Bugdad Radway. In the telegraphic correspondence which now ensued the action and views of His Mayouty's Government were made clear to M. Lavolsky. He was informed that no negotiations had as yet proceeded with the German Government, and that nothing but unofficial conversations between German and British financial groups had taken place; that the German Ambassadur in London had been told that in any agreement over the Bagdad Radway French and Russian co-operation must be invited; that the control of the Gulf section was the minimum which Ills Majesty's Government could occupt in any settlement, and the acquirement of that minimum was rendered the more pressing by the possibility that irrigation would destroy the navigable character of the Tigenand Euphentes Rivers. M. Isrobsky was informed that the British group had pressed to have control of the Khanskin branch as well, but that life Majesty's Government had considered Russian interests involved, and had retention runs supposeing out proposal, he was it is that it, B 22 it Railway would be built, with or without British and Russian co-operation, and a decision was urgent; meanwhile, this Majesty's Government were in ignorance of Russia's views as to participation. Though His Majesty's Government would certainly rane no objection to negotiations between Russia and Germany as to purticipation in the radway north of Bagdad, they trusted the Russian Government would keep them informed of their progress, and they could not remain indifferent if any Concessions were brought to recognize the loyalty of His Majesty's Government in the matter, and to view the nintter in a colmer and more rational spirit. On the

"His present attitude may be summarized as follows: He considers that the proposals of M. Gwinner constitute an entirely new departure; he does not question the right of the British group or of His Majesty's Government to accept them, and he expects that eventually they will do so; he fully appreciates the loyalty of this Majesty's Government in so promptly informing him of the proposals, and of abstauring from accepting immediately proposals which are so eminently satisfactory to British interests. He regards an arrangement between England and Germany on the basis of the proposals of M. Gwanner as dispelling any expectation that the Bagdad Railway will be discussed between Germany, England, France, and Russia. It will necessarily amount to an arrangement between Germany and England, by which the latter

all interest in the a c to the north of Hagdad. In these circumstances he considers that Russia will be left alone to discuss matters with Germany so far as Russian interests are concerned. These i it rests he regards, from the political, strategical, and economical posits of view, as of great importance; and he is of opinion that Russia will enter into negotiations with her hands much weakened, Lad he been able to have the continuation of British co-operation n these negotiations he would be more hopeful of their success. France, he considers, is already in a sense a partner in the Bugdad Radway, and, moreover, her interests in the project are small in comparison with those of Russia. He has at present, so far as I have been able to ascertain, no definite views as to the basis on which he would endeavour to obtain a Russian participation in the railway. I do not think that he so much desires an actual particle part in the riday he rather a stea to come a as that Germany will not endeavour to push radway enterprise in those portions of Persia in which Russia possesses direct and immediate interests. In what manner he may accure such assurances he is not at present very clear, but he is well aware that in order to do so he will probably he obliged to offer Germany a quit pro que. Of what character such a guid pro que will be he does not know, nor in he decided as to the quarter in which he could find it. I do not think that he would consider himself prochided from seeking it in the neutral zone of Persia, but he will keep His Majeste's Government informed of the progress of his negotiations with Germany whenever they may be commenced. Personally, I doubt if M. lavolsky would be inchned to admit Germany into the nuntral zone of

M. Isvolsky's policy with regard to the Bagdad Railway has always been a negative one, and it is easy to understand how difficult it must be for him to state in what manner the Russian Government would participate in a railway the construction of which they would prefer to see indefinitely postpound. The reply of the Russian Government to Sir A. Nicolson, Sir A. Nicolson. Russian Convention with regard to Persia would be strictly observed. Unable to formulate any scheme providing for Russian participation in the railway, and fearing that a settlement of the Bagdad Railway question in which lines received nothing would react unfavourably on the national prestige, on his own position, and on the Anglo-Russian satests, M. Involsky expressed the deare to come to some understanding with His Majesty's Sir A. Nicolson, Government over railways in Persia, providing for the possibility of linking No. 652, up the Russian and Indian railway systems, or at any rate, for earmarking December 1 1909. Concessions for radways with that object. His views on this point, however, have not yet been fully developed, and the uton in still being examined by the British and Indian Governments.

The position at the and of the year and the course of action which His Majesty's Government contemplated adopting was stated in telegrams to Sir F. Bertie and Sir A. Nicolson as follows:

"As far as we are concerned, position is as follows: Gwinner's overtures Telegraphe, led to negotiations with Cosmol which may require but have not been become so led to negotiations with Cassel, which may result, but have not yet 1802. resulted definitely, in an offer to British financiers of assured control of construction and working of railway from Bagdad to Gulf.

"When financiers agree, His Mujesty's Government will have to consider whether arrangement proposed would justify them in agreen a to increase of Turkish customs dues without condition. I should then let French and Russian Governments know what the agreement between financiers was and what was our opinion of it before taking any step. It would then be for French and Russian Governments to let us know what conditions as regards Bagdad Railway [1723]

Questions of internationalisation and of any Concession of parts of railway north of Bagdad have not come at all into negotiations between British and German financiers, and we should await views of French and Russian Governments as to how these points should be dealt with before raising them. Essential point for us is to ensure that railway from Bagdad to Gulf does not pass into foreign bands, though British financiers had expressed to me desire to secure interest in Khanskin branch size.

*Assuming that terms agreed between Cassel and Gwinner are found satisfactory by His Majesty's Government on this point, it would still remain to be ascertained whether German and Turkish Governments would agree about them. #### France.

The French Government were kept fully informed of all the negotiations which passed with Russia, and the views and intentions of Itia Majesty's Government as explained to M. Involsky were all communicated to them. From the first M. Pichon expressed himself as well actified at the prospects of a settlement which Dr. Gwinner's action presented. He informed Sir F. Bertæ that he fully recognized the necessity for Great Britain to secure her political and commercial interests in the Persian Gulf by acquiring control of the southern section of the railway, but that French public opinion would certainly require that France should receive some quid pre que for her consent to such an arrangement, and that he would study what form of communication would be most suitable.

On the 27th December M Pichon took an opportunity to explain to the Prench Chamber the attitude of the French Government. A deputy (M. consont) quoted the words of W. Debesses in 1902 "If a solution had been found in virtue of which the Russian element would be at complete bherty to participate in the enterprise, and by virtue of which the French olement would possess, as regards the countraction, working, and general are the sale of the most favoured M Constant whether he was some ourset with the deal of With the state of DWII, note I increase the asy and as as a few a last and a last that the krench Government always had been and still were in favour of internationaloung the Bagdad Railway; that the recent formation of a symmetre in Switzerland to continue the construction of the railway beyond It algourbou as well as the partempation of the Ottoman Bank in the enterprise was wiscous the case the Prench Covernment, who looked for a settlement of the whole question on the basis of an equitable cooperation of the various States concerned On the 15th January the French Ambassador, who had laid con

3. A Concession for the railway from Bagdad to Homs and the Mediterranean; this demand to be absolutely essential.

The Ambassador also said that an Anglo-French group, including Sir F Cassel was hong formed to finance translation in Mesopotames, and that it was proposed that British and French capital should finance the Burdad-Homs line.

they are unwilling to contemplate any modification in the terms of the concession, even if the new that any negotiation of the kind would be very difficult to carry through in the present state of affairs, and might endanger the concession in general.

They would not listen to a proposal involving a general modification of the convention, offered.

The objection which Sir Edward Grey sens to this proposed is that it would envolve accepting the kilometric guarantees, and that this would expose the Government to the charge of inconsustancy, and to damaging criticisms in the press and in Parliament.

As regards the system of the guarantees under the Bagdad convention, the country of the great advantage be modified, and it is worth considering whether we might with great advantage be modified, and it is worth considering whether we might were arranged on a rational basis. I do not at present put this forward as more than a were arranged on a rational basis.

Indiging whether it is practicable

As regards the construction guarantee, the system is not open to the same enticisms. It increly amounts to a guarantee of interest and amount find on the retinated cost of construction is exaggerated. This may be true, if the easy metions are considered separately and if the $,500% remains intact, but if the 2,000% per kilometro is deducted from the $,500%, the remainder (6,500%) will probably not leave on excountry margin. Here, again, Mr. Money's reports will give us a more accurate basis, but taking into consoderation the gauge and the substantial nature of the line, the provision of roding stock, the cost of terminal arrangements at Englad, Busionab, and Kowest, and of one or more bridges over the Euphrates, and, finally, the payment of interest during construction, the cost cannot be low. Dr. von Gwinner has given the natural construction cost of the Koma-Eregli section a very easy one, with no lag bridges) as 5,000%, per kilometre, without interest, during construction.

In any case, it cannot be expected that British capital will take the matter up without a reasonable prospect of profit, and, if it is a condition of obtaining central of the Bagdad-Gulf section, that 2,000l, per kilometre should be assigned to the Germans, there is not much room for reduction in the amount of the guarantee. It has been suggested that the British Government might give a guarantee, but the Turks would have the strongest objection to this, and would far rather pay the guarantee themselves. If, therefore, the Government regard it as an object of great importance to obtain control of the Gulf section, it may be inevitable to take the only course open for arriving at this end, even though it abould lead to some criticism. If we could start with a clean slate the case might be different, but we have to start from things as they are, with the Germans in the position of best possedent.

The position is further complicated now by the question of errigation in Mesopetamia and the Bagdarl-Damascus Rudway, which has been proposed by Sir William Willow ksi.

Wilcocks's irrigation schemes require large amon of money. The Ottoman Government will not be able to find these sums out of their ordinary budget. If the schemes are successful there will be a large return to the Government in titles and other taxes, and perhaps from the sale of origined lands. It was evident that there was an opportunity here for foreign expital to assure the Government in carrying out remainerative works, and that it was describe that British capital should take a leading part in it

You are aware that when Cassal was in Paris before Christman he had some conversation on the subject with Bardae, who is in close alliance with the Ottoman Bank. A general understanding resulted, that there should be co-operation between the English and French group as regards Mesopotamian irrigation. There was no detailed agreement, and no discussion of any actual scheme. Cassel's view was that it was necessary to obtain further information, and to have the opinions of other expects on Wilcocki's projects before they could form the basis of a financial arrangement. With this object we have retained the services of Webb and Garatin, and Webb will go to Mesopotamin this spring. Our idea of the procedure to be followed was that when this information was obtained, the time would have arrived for discussing a concrete scheme with the French group and with the Government.

The French group have, however, gone ahead. They have been corrying on negotiations here through Mr. Ornstein. When I left Constantinople in December their proposals appeared very vague and indefinite; but in the last few day. Mr. Ornstein has last before the Government three druft conventions, indenting the

The general idea of the proposals is that the meany for the irrigation schemes and the railway is to be prevaled by means of Government bunds, which the diamonal group undertakes to issue. The tithes, to, of the irrigated lands are to provide the interest on these bonds, and the capital is to be repeal out of the proceeds of the rale of Government lands. It is probably intended that the Government should guarantee interest on the bonds and any detect on the working of the railway; but the drafts carefully refront from specifying what is to happen if the revenues from the irrigated lands do not suffice for those purposes. Any profit from the railway and the surplus who provide the money. The financial interests are to have a voice in the control of the quedertaking generally

It may appear strange that the Ottoman Bank should put forward a railway substantial share. But the French participation has never been recognised by the French Government, and the Baguad-Homs line would be in the interest of the French railways in Syrm. What view the French Government take, I do not know, but presumably the Ottoman Bank have not put forward the scheme without the approval of their Government.

In any case, the finking of the railway scheme with the irrigation proposals is somewhat embarrasong as far as we are concerned, having regard to the provisional understanding between Cassel and Gwinner.

It is also necessary for us to consider whether we should come to any more definite and the substitute of the substitute

Il a paru au groupe financier qu'il semit intéressant pour un Gouvernement de presenter nux Chambres un pareit projet formant un tout homogène, et destiné, nous le répétons, à rendre à une partie considérable des territoires de l'Empire que aulendeur depuis trop longtemps abolic, sans toucher, si peu que es soit, aux ressources actuelles du hudget

Dans l'élaboration de ce programme le groupe financier s'est précecupé de deux the transfer of the same parties a droit public ottoman indiscuté. A cet égard, la législation forcière ottomane relative aux biens du domaine de l'Etat-qu'il s'agrese des terres mortes ("mévet") ou des biens demaniaux proprenent dits (" miri") -a été mise à contribution dans ce projet dans une mesure qui ne peut manquer d'avoir l'approbation du Gouvernement. artisans de tout genre, qui sera la conséquence naturelle de la mise en valeur de ca vaste territoire. Deter la Mésopotamie d'un système d'irrigation qui décuplera, et au della, en force de production, serait en vérué un effort stérile si on ne lui fournissant passimultanément les moyens de transporter rapidement et économiquement ses produits vers les rapidement et les matteries en produits vers de toute nature dont elle aura besein et provenant de ces pays, et d y amener le flot de travailleurs qu'une exploitation agricole d'une telle envergure exigers.

Penetré de la nécessité de créer ces moyens de transport qui font netuellement ut, Sir William Wilcocks à recommandé au Gouvernement Impérini qui l'a accepté, la construction d'une ligne de chemin de fer à voie normale devant reher Bagdad à la Méditerranée par Hit, El Kaïm, Palmyre, Homs, et Tripoli. Ce tracé, qui développe une longueur totale d'environ 826 kilom, entraînera la dépense la plus réduite, le coût total de la ligne étant estimé à £ T 3,000,000 environ.

Afin de faire entrer la plus rapidement possible la population tant opreuvée de cos regions dans la joursance des bienfaits que ce programme laisse si clairement entrevoir, le Gouvernement Impérial s'est sans retard préoccupé de rechercher les voies et moyens les plus appropries pour son exécution. Il a auestôt inscrit dans le budget de l'année en cours un premier crédit de £ T 160,000 pour faire exécutir certains trivaux urgents qui dotvent enrayer momentanément le mal causé par les débordements périodiques des fleuves. Il a dû cependant reconnaître que les ressources déjà exignée de Tréact. Le permettaient d'encourre des dépenses aussi considérables qu'à la condition de les déciables à une prompte réalisation du programme adopté. Pour toutes les censidérations, et après un examen mêrement réfloché de cette situation, le Couvernement Impérial a été amené à la conclusion que le puissant groupe financier, qui, de sa propre instintive, est voiu lui offrir le concours de ses capitaux et de sa compotence pour l'aider d'ement et effeccement dans l'accomplissement de l'œuvre de régénération qu'il s'est imposé et qu'il est fermement décidé de mener à bien.

La groupe financier, épris de l'idée de rendre à la Mésopotamie la renominée de prosperité et de relieue dont elle journant depuis les temps les plus reculés de l'histoire, sest livré à une étude très apprefeudie des projets que le Gouvernement Impérial a formé dans co but,

Il s'est tout d'abord rendu compte que la situation actuelle des finances de l'Empire par de detraire de con resources ordinaires les sommes très importantes "ravanz projetés nécessitent, sons grover louviesment le budget et en compromettre "à un moment surtout de son histoire où des référmes organies s'imposent à la fois dans prosque tentes les branches de l'administration.

Paccord en cela avec la Gouvernement Impérial et reconnament avec lui d'autre part que, en se procurant les capitaux nécessaires pour la réalisation du programme par également sur le toudget de l'État, le groupe financer s'est préoccupé de rochercher une solution qui répendrait efficacement et complètement aux engences de la atuntion et qui en même temps de constituerait aucune charge nouvelle budgetuire. Il croit avoir trouvé cette solution, et en la soumettant à la considération du Couvernement Impérial deu expose les grandes lignes du la façon autente.

Sir William Willeocks estime que les travaux d'irrigation qu'il recommande, et qui deivent conter ET 4,000,000, rendront à la culture un territoire d'une étendue d'environ 1,000,000 d'hectares aujourd'hui déserte, moulte, et sans volcur pour être destribus parmi les habitants, pour la plapart nomades, qui les occupent les 500,000 bectares environ restants, devenus ainsi terres libres de l'État, viendrent accretire d'autant son demante en Mésopotamic.

Quant au revenu que le Gouvernement pourra éventuellement retirer sous forme de disses et impôt foncier seulement de cette première section et qui constituera un revenu nouveau. Sir William Willeboks l'évalue à £ T. 750,000 par au, estimation qu'il considère très modérée, étant donné que la même tecre en Egypte est frappée d'un impôt d'environ £ E. 2) par hectare.

Mais après avoir rendu une pareille superficie à l'agriculture, le groupe financier estime qu'il sera indispensable d'en aménager les terres ques en leur fournissent les moyens de devenir productives—canaux d'arrosage, de drainage, bétail, instruments aratoires, semences et main-d'œuvre—ce qui comporterait de nouveau et importants de capitaux. Ausi pour ce qui cet des terres à distribuer aux habitants

1728]

Il faudra nécessairement venir en aide à ceux-or en leur consentant des avances pour faciliter ces amouagements, et en ce qui concerne le domaine nouvellement sonatitué de l'Etat il y aura lieu d'en aménager aussi certaines parties, aun de donner plus de valeur aux terres et amorcer les ventes, car le Gouvernement ne peut exploiter lui-même utilement un domaine de cette étendue, mais a, au contraire, le plus grand intérét de le lots et de gréer ains par des veutes successives la petite propriété, seule capable de faire produire à la terre son maximum de rendement.

Cant au chemin de fer qui doit former le complément naturel des travaux du anni i, il est indispensable que sa construction et son exploitation fassent partie de l'ensemble de l'opération et restent sous le contrôle du Gouvernement Impéral. Ce chemin de fer a, en effet, pour but immédiat et principal de transporter les denrées the attachment and a sent on a settle seater the attachment to the pourra l'obliger à abaisser d'une façon parfois sensible ses tarifs de transport et à sacrifier ainsi ses propres intérête au profit et pour le plus grand avantage de l'agriculture; tandis que l'exploitation confice à des tiens moins intéressée, puisqu'ils ne jourrant d'angune garantie gouvernementale, pourrait susciter des difficultés qu'il semble préférable d'éviter.

Mais pour obtenir les résultate qui viennent d'être indiquée et donner de la valeur à une propriété qui n'en possède aucune actuellement, il faut avant tout effectuer les depenses qui dorvent les produire et qui consistent, comme en vient de le voir, en depenses afférentes aux travaux d'arrigation, à la construction du chemin de fer, et en avances et dépenses pour l'aménagement des terres.

Le groupe financier se déclare prôt à seconder les efforts du Gouvernement Irapérial, et à réaliser avec lui ce vaste programme en constituent entre le Gouvernoment et le groupe financier une association dans laquelle le premier apporte la propriété qu'il el erche à mettre an raleur, et le second les capitaux et tous les concours qui permetiront d'attenuere ce but. Les intérêts des deux parties devegant de cette façon identiques ne pourront à aucun moment se heurter, et l'œuvre auns poursuivie en commun para elle anim of not a rose to a no gen a to have forter meant in again interet à veiller à la bonne exécution des travaux, à la miss en état des terres afin de lear donner la plus grande valeur possible en vue de leur revente et à une exploitation rationnelle et desponaque du chemin de fer. Les opérations financières nécessitem par ce programme pouvent se résumer de la façon survante :-

1. Création d'obligations qui seront émuse par tranches au fur et à mesure des besonnt et dont le placement sera assuré par le groupe financier

Ces obligations seront garantees par le domaine des terres libres de l'Etat en

Enclosure in No. 16.

Menute by Ser H. Llewellyn Smith on Bagdad Radway Negatiations.

The President,

If the present negotiations are front ass which is very difficult and complicated, but, unless there are some considerations which have not been fully revealed to us at the Board of Trade, I see no sufficient ground at present for any substantial medification of the position which we have taken up, as set out in our recent letter to the Foreign Office.

Shortly stated, our position is this: We assume as an axiom (which we have no means of criticising) that, for reasons of high policy, means have to be found to prevent the Germans from completing their rulway to the Persian Gu.f. As they are under contract to build such a railway, there are only two courses possible—

1. To thwart them by making it impossible for the Turks to supply the necessary funds, or by obtaining a rival concession which will make the German line unprefitable; or

2. To come to terms (a) with the Germans to obtain from them their concession so far as concerns the southern section of the railway, and (b) with the Turks to modify the terms of the concesson in any way that appears desirable.

We have no means of judging how far course (1) is permanently possible, but I should doubt if it can be ultimately successful, and it seems likely that German influence will at least be strong enough, playing on Turkish susceptibilities, to make it impossible for us to obtain a new concession for a rival line. If this be so (and on this point our knowledge of the intuition is necessarily very imperfect) we can only proceed on the lines of (2).

(2.) It is, I think, necessary to keep perfectly distinct in our minds the transaction with the Germans and the transaction with the Turks, although there might be considerable advantage if it were possible to conduct the double negotiation simultaneously :--

(a.) The Germans can, of course, only put us in possession of what they have to will be a concess a based upon kilometric generations. It we can a range with them is—

1. The terms as to payment or share of control on which they will part with the concession for the southern section; and

2. An undertaking not to oppose any agreement between us and the Turks to vary the conditions of the concession so transferred.

It is obviously useless for us to raise with the Germans the question of kilometric guarantees. On the other hand, it ought, I think, to be clear that, by stipulating with the Germans for a free hand to revise the financial conditions by agreement with the Turks, we take power (if thought desirable) to dispense wholly or partly with kilometric guarantees on our part of the concession. I hardly think that by such a transaction a latter first we have the self to consider the existent for him in guarantees, though, no doubt, the transaction might be so represented by opponents a less caref H. It also

(b.) In negotiating with the Turks we should, I think, he in a position to put before them an attractive proposal for revising the conditions of the concession, but as Mr. Marling's despatch suggests that a proposal for a British guarantee would be rejected by the Turks, and some guarantee would probably be requisite in order to attract investors, it seems to me that we shall inevitably come back to a Turkish, another or payment of some kind. Sir E. Grey seems to incline towards a scheme for guaranteeing the interest on capital, and sharing equally in the profits, as against a system of constructional and working "kilometric" guarantees. Such a scheme would be materially more favourable to Turkey than the conditions of the existing linguisd Convention, but if weighted with a payment to the Germans of 2,000f, per kilometric, the apparent difference in favour of Turkey would not be so great us to make it certain that the Turks would prefer the alternative to the existing system of a nace which (it must never be forgotten) does at least gratify their antional pride

* I wante that this payment or its equivalent will have to be made anyhow

We have told the Foreign Office that we consider the terms of the existing con associately real stactors, as injuring as unfair limber in Tirkes if the pro- at the and the house by the property of the prope But our pass are water and in the best of the past of a grafter or a die not more then equivalent to the probable cost of construction and rolling-stock, and at the same one or remain them I am the the the the property represents up to 4,500 ft. per kilometre. On the other band, the Turkish share of the gross procesowould be reduced to one-half the excess over 4,500 fr. per kilometre.

This proposal is of course open to further revision, and it may be that the scheme of a guerantee of interest might be substituted for it with advantage. But we can only know about this when we come to negotiate with the Turks, and it is at least debatable whether they would regard the ulternative as an improvement.

torong of the Bagdad Convention. What we have to look at is (1) the total burden on Turkey's finances; and (2) the degree to which the goarantee encourages or discourages the successful development of the enterprise.

Of course, it is managed that the Turkish guarantee of interest would be a really substantial guarantee supported by definite revenues. Otherwise British financiers would not look at it.

The last part of Sir E. Grey's memorandum on the contract of significant the capital and control shall remain predominantly the takement to a take a take of the take the ta few persons, and, in any case, I connot think that there will be any deficulty in supulating that the company shall put a definite restriction on the sale of its shares. Whether the particular plan suggested for the purpose in the memorandum is the lest I should not like to say, but the point (which, of course, is of cardinal importance, is do not think need give rise to anxiety. It is one entirely between Him Vi say a coverament and the promoters of the new company, and does not affect . . negotiation with Germany or Turkey. At the proper stage, however, the matter sould be horse in mind.

In the above note I have not referred in detail to the augment ; was an M Stanley, viz., that the Garmans should be paul off with a lump sum by the Turks of an it is a state of the stat w. lout appearing in the estimates, and giving rise to keen Parliamentary discussion, and the parties of the Corner soutiment.

No. 18.

Sir C. Hardinge to Sir H. Llewellyn Smith.

Dear Llewellyn Smith. Foreign Office, March 11, 1910. MANY thanks for your letter of the 10th March, returning my draft to Babington-Smith.

I think I am correct in saying that the 2,000?, per kilom, is intended to meet the working expenses on the sections west of Bagdad, because, in his letter under reply, Bahington-Smith, in describing the working expenses guarantee under the concession of 1903, writes: "The Germans admit the perversity of the arrangement, and say that, in order to meet the future charge arising from it (i.e., the working expenses guarantee), 11 y propose to put aside as a reserve a sum of 2,000k per kilom from the margin on the construction of the easy sections."

I fully agree with you that we must effect our participation in the railway, if at all, both by agreement with the Turkish Government and subject to some arrangement advantageous to the Germans. It seems to me that the nearer we can approach to agreement with the Turks the stronger will be our position in regard to the Germans, and if the latter know that we are actively negotiating with the former with the objective of a competing line down the Tigris, they will not improbably consider that our co-operation would be a very substantial advantage to them, as it would obvinte a prospect of serious competition. Another inducement to the Germans to secure our participation is that Koweit would be incomparably the best terminus for a great transcontinental line.

As to the prospects of reaching an agreement with the Turks, I know that some people are inclined to be sceptical, but much depends on the way in which the matter is put before them. We have the powerful lever of the 4 per cent, customs increase, and by offering to give the competing has a Turkish façade by granting the Turkish Government a certain proportion of aharea as purchase money for the concession, and by making a reassuring declaration to to Turkish sovereignty in Mesopotonia, and as to the position at Kowert, we should be able to convince the Turks that our objects are exclusively commercial when we sook for a competing line down the Tigris. We should of course make it clear to the Turks when acceptating that we would prefer to co-operate with the Germans if they would agree to admit our participation on terms less unorous to Turkey than those of the 1903 coursesio.

I will send you a copy of my letter to Habington-Smith, as you desire.

I am, &c

Ser C. Hardinge to Sir H. Babington-Smith

D or Babington-Smith, Foreign Office, March 12, 1910. I AM very much obliged to you for your interesting letter of the 8th February. contaming an able statement of the arguments in favour of accepting Gwinner's Offer to Chart.

I quite agree that the present moment is not an opportune one for pressurg The Contract of the Contract of the constitution bre a received to the latter of the fresh to a store I a the fresh may a constraint and the second second second second no mused by the Turks against British interests acquiring 60 per cent, of the total capital of the Gulf sections of the railway. Were there any approhengions on the part of Turkey, a clear statement of our intentions should suffice to dispel thom, and to show that no challenge to Turkey's sovereign rights would be involved. All that we want is to maintain and foster, under the protection of the Turkish Government, the trade interests which this country has been developing for over two centuries. The method by which we propose to attain this object is that British investors should hold a certain percentage in a Turkish Railway Company's share capital, and that they should be adequately represented on the Board of that Rullway Cu quay, whose total share capital will revert to the Ottoman Government on the expiration of the Concession. Much will depend upon the attractiveness of the form in which the matter is presented to the Turks.

I do not believe that the position of the Germans is quite as strong as you seem to think. The 1903 Concession is bound to call forth increasing discontent as the line progresses and the payment of the annuities for each successive section is exacted from the Turkish taxpayer. My belief is that the Germans are auxious for our company. The law to large the real of the first that the Germans are auxious for our position at Koweit, and that the terminus can bardly be made elsewhere, and they do not want opposition to their interests in Mesopotamia on account of the political uncertainty which is at present affecting enterprise in Turkey. They realize, moreover, that so long as we are hostile to the project their bonds will not obtain quotation on the Paris market.

It is not impossible that, if His Majesty's Government decline to approve of British participation in the Bagdad Railway unless there is a modification of the Concession, the Germans may give way and agree to suggest a modification to the Porte. Were the Germans to unite with us in such a course it is probable that the outtons increase were held out to them. The Germans might then stipulate that the whole benefit of such a modification should not be enjoyed by Turkey alone, but should be shared by them, and they could then arrange matters as they liked best.

Our objections to the kilometric guarantees remain, and to accept them would expose us to very damaging criticism from the public. It is true that the working guarantees against the railway being sufficiently worked to make it pay. It should be noted, however, that in the sections as far east as Mosal the grass traffic receipts may well be under 4 500 fr a kilometre, as will probably derive their profits on those sections, not from traffic receipts, but from the most it is with a section would probably exceed the 4,500 fr, per kilometre, and there to meet the working expenses of the western sections of the line, which must almost certainly be lower than those of the Gulf sections?

As for the construction annuity, we look upon it as altogether in excess of what the actual cost is likely to be. The Committee which examined the question here to we apply the state of the concession would be utterly inconsutent with the interests of Toolsey. Such a Concession would be utterly inconsutent with the interests of

I unclose a short statement showing how the Committee arrived at this estimate of profit, and from it you will see that, while recognizing the substantial nature of the first section as against Dr. Gwinner's figure of 5,000L, which you quote. We draw our own conclusions as to the disposal of the difference.

Now us to the Gulf sections. You say, "The cash product of the bonds provided to meet the construction cost is about 8,500% per kilometre." If 2,000% per kilometre is surrendered to Dr. Gwinner in respect of the western portion of the line there will remain 6,500%, and this sum, you urge, will not leave an excessive margin, taking into consideration the gauge and the substantial nature of the line, the provision of and of one or more bridges over the Euphrates, and, finally, the payment of interest during construction.

do not think it correct to include in the cost of constructing the Bagdad-Gulf ecctions of the radway the expense of "terminal arrangements" other than stations. It is expressly stipulated in Article 23 of the Concession of 1903 that "le concessionuaire that there shall be special port dues, which would of course be regulated on such a scale as to cover not only the current expenditure of the port authorities, but also the interest and sucking fund on the original outlay in construction.

With regard to bridges, so far as I can see, over the Euphrates there need only

As to payment of interest during construction, thus stem need not be very considerable on the Gulf sections, where the engineering obstacles are few. If, as in any case would be necessary, Article 29 were modified, it might be possible to undertake work on all the Gulf sections aimultaneously, thus lessening the period of construction during which interest would have to be 2 after construction; it is impossible to estimate cost with precision in the absence of detailed surveys, but such information as we have does not point to so high a fire. The first section at 4,875t, per kilometre, including rolling-stock, and they fully recognized that the first section was relatively easy and that the line is substantially built. As a fair estimate of the cost on the Bagdad-Gulf sections Sir James Mackay, who has some Indian experience, suggested 8,000t. a mile (5,000t. a knowners); i.e., 625t per kilometre in excess of what the first section is believed to have east.

So much for the cost of construction. I now take the liability of the Ottoman C. I now take the liability of the Ottoman Bagdad to Koweit a distance of approximately 450 miles, or may 716 kilom

The construction annuity yields, to take your figure, 8,500%, per kilometre; and as the loans, after allowing for discounting and bankers' charges, produce only slightly over 80 per cent. of their nominal amount, interest must be received at 5 per cent.

The capital sum on which interest would be payable would be 8,500!, x 716, or interest would be subject to reduction only by the operation of the sinking fund, which is agreed over the whole period till the expiration of the Concession.

The working expenses guarantee is not a fixed charge, but it might at its maximum amount reach 4,500 fr. per amount per kilometre, which works out at 128,880 ft. year

The halabity of the Turkish tax-payer in respect of the Bagdad Gulf sections as I have the street of the Bagdad Gulf sections operation of the anking fund, and, with the working guarantee, it might reach 433,1867

I may term the "Indian" system. This could be introduced on the most advantageous base if His Majesty's Government were to offer a guarantee of 3 per cent, on the actual cost of construction, which we put up at, say, 8,600,000L including relling stock. It has been suggested that the Turks would regard this proposal as a dereniction of their severeign rights.

The other alternative which might be suggested to the Turkish Government in that they should themselves give a guarantee. In their case it would probably have to be one of 5 per cent, and the guarantee would have to begin from the moment the money was required for construction. A 5 per cent, guarantee would only amount to 180,000t, a year, plus, say, 20,000t, in temperat of bankers' profits and discounting, if such were accessary in connection with the financial operations; and, an important point, this labelity would not continue for ninety-man years, but it would cease as soon as the radway realized a not profit of 5 per cent. (a state of affairs which ought the "Indian" system, would share equally with the Radway Company in any profit over and above 5 per cent.

Now to contrast the two systems -

Under the Concession of 1903 the Turkish Government might have to pay, as whited above, a maximum amount of 433,180l. Should, however, Dr. Gwinner in on having 2,000l. of the construction guarantee (vis., 2,000l. × 716 makes a ca., t sum of 1,432,000l., which, at 5 per cent., represents an annual charge of 71,000l.) on the Brigital-Gulf sections, and make arrangements on that hasis with the Turkish Government, while the "Indian" system was adopted by the British capitalists, the cost to the Turkish Government would be 71,600l. for the guarantee and 200,000l year so the "Indian" maximum, making a total of about 270,000l.

The "Indian" system has the great advantage that the guarantee really corresponds to the actual cost of construction: it is a far elemer plan than the otat would benefit the Turkish tax-payer; and it would foster and develop Br., trade, getting us out of what you call the "perversity" of the working guarantee, which renders the milway incapable of being worked as a commercial success. If, on the other hand, we accept Dr. Gwinner's proposal, the Germans will be reaping the later than the first of the transaction.

We are not opposed to kilometric guarantees as a system : they exist, as you know, in Egypt; what we object to is the scale of the guarantees allotted under the Charas a fitting a pose good they be a trained a burdens altogether in excess of what is fair upon the Turkish tax-payer.

As regards the Bugdad-Homs Railway and the irrigation schemes in Mesopotamia, the French Government are very anxious that British capital should participate in the railway upon which they have bestowed their blessing, and they themselves be built, we think it very desirable that British finance should participate in the scheme, so as to have a voice in the construction and control of a line which may in the future be of considerable advantage to British trade. The question of the extent of the participation of a British group and other details can be decided later. I understand, however, that the French Government have no knowledge whatever of the Ornstein group, and that the Ottoman Bank is not represented in it. Moreover, the French Government will take good care that no group gets the concession except through them. I may add that they have already announced their claim to a concession for this rankery as a condition of the 4 per cent, surtax,

In view of my earlier statement that we agree with you that, owing to the prejudices aroused by the Lynch Concession, it may be advanible to postpone tomporarily any further pressure to obtain for British capital the construction and control of the Person Gulf section of the Bagded Railway, it appears to us that for the present it would be well for British finance to concentrate on encouraging sound minutes the importance of the southern end of the Bagdad Railway.

Beheve me, &c.

(No. 80.) Sir.

Foreign Office, Merch 31, 1910.

I OBSERVED to the German charge d'affaires to-day that, though I was not had been reflecting upon what Count Metternich had said to me as to the non-renewal of the discussions started by Herr von Bethingan-Hollweg last autumn with regard to a general arrangement between England and Germany

A reduction in naval expenditure was, in our view, essential to any arrangement of this kind, and Count Metternich had readirmed the impossibility of altering the German Naval Law. An arrangement of this kind was, therefore, not possible at resent; but it seemed to me that the key to smooth relations in innay respects tween the two countries might be found in a settlement of the Bagtad Railway ment did not wish to have a discussion of the Bogind Railway d quatre; but we, on the other hand, though we might discuss the question separately, could not have a settlement with Germany ourselves unless France and Russia also had a settlement with Germany. With regard to France, there was no difficulty. With regard to Russia and ourselves, perhaps a settlement might now be made which would include the Persian question.

The German charge duffaires received this very sympathetically. He said that be had felt for some time that a frank discussion of Persian affairs, though in a non-committal way, would be desirable to prevent the growth of a bad soutiment. Germany did not wish to be made to feel that a monopoly was being established against her in Persia in favour of England, Russia, and eventually France.

I told him that we were bound to watch very carefully our strategic and political interests. This would not be so necessary if Persia were a strong country, able to hold that it is the strategically or politically. On her giving away concessions which would injure us strategically or politically. On the other hand, however, we had no deare to exclude foreign commerce by establishing a commercial monopoly There was a certain analogy between the situation in Persia and the situation in Morocco. The analogy was not exact, because in the case of Persia there was no convention of the nature of the Algeerras Act. But, still, as Germany had been able to come to a working arrangement commercially with France about Morocco, I did not see why she should not get on in a similar way with Russia and ourselves about Persia-

The German charge d'affaires remarked that he had known something of Morocco when he was there, and, in his opinion, there need have been no trouble had it not been for the had acutument which was aroused some time ago. He saw no reason why an arrangement should not be come to with regard to Persia, and why the arrangement should not be satisfactory to our position in the Personn Gulf. He understood that we had considered our position in the Gulf to be prejudiced by the liagded Railway

I said that a great deal of Indian and other British trade went to the Gulf , for generations we had done all the work there, and the Lynch concession had control over r T mer numeration has much to do with the flow of trade, and if the railway were made down to the Colf and regation took place in Mesopotamia, the mesna of communication now in our hands would be outerely superseded. It was in this sense that our position in the Galf was at stake. So far as the northern sections of the railway were concerned, Clermany was not displacing anything of ours; but, if Germany had control over the southorn section, the would be displacing our vested interests.

The charge d'affaires told me that it was believed to be our view that, even if Germany dal give us control over the southern section, this would not be a concession for which we owned anything to Germany.

I pointed out that the inventment of British capital in the completion of the line would be a quid pro quo, and so would be our consent to the 4 per cent, increase of the Turkish customs dues, which would help the Turke to find the money for the other sections of the ratiway.

The charge d'affaires dwell upon the difficulty which his Government experienced owing to the pan-German feeling. This feeling made it hard for them to appear to make concessions without getting substantial considerations in return. At the same time, he did not think this was a reason for not preparing the way for a settlement.

reflections had been much influenced by the impression made upon me of a good disposition and a genuine deare to smooth matters on the part of Herr von Bethmann-Hollwest, and I would add of Hurr you Schoon also.

Otherwise I have heard nothing more from Germany on A SECTION AND A SECTION AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY OF THE P The second second subject might take place segarately between each party if the Germans were not disposed to admit discussion of quatre, but I unde it clear that France and Russia must be included in any settlement to which we lent ourselves, and that therefore such cottlement would of necessity be d quatre. With regard to Persia, I said that I saw no reason why Gormany, who had reached a satisfactory modes overed with France on commercial matters in Morocco, should not do the same in Persia with Great Britain and Russia. We had no intention of establishing a commercial monopoly to the exclusion of others in Persia. we merely found it imperative, in view of Persia's present weakness, to watch our strategical and political interests very closely, and to see that they were not demaged by the granting by Persia of concessions to foreigners.

Our conversation was general and quite informal, but you should inform

M. Isvolsky of it, as it might be useful, although it had no direct bearing on pending questions. The German charge d'affaires said he was entirely in sympathy with the views which I expressed.

Telegraphic) P. Foreign Office, April 4, 1010. PRESENT attribute of His Majesty's Government with regard to question of 4 per cent, customs increase and Bagdad Radway is not open to the interpretation indicated in your telegram No. 51 of the 2nd April. The attitude of His Majesty's Government is favourable to the construction of railways in Mesopotemia, so long as this is not done in a way which might be prejudicial to the interests of British trada. You should explain this to Refeat Pashs. The only point on which we must is, that if the custome increase is to be devoted, directly or indirectly, to the further construction of a line which cannot fail, as now controlled, to damage long-established British trade interests in Mesopotamia, we cannot give our consent to that dustries merense. If, however, the Ottoman Government accept one of two alternative conditions we will change our attitude. These two conditions are that a substantial interest should be granted to us in a "protective" concession for a rudway along the Tigrim Valley, or admission on terms acceptable to ourselves to participation in the Gulf sections of the Bugdad Railway

You should supress upon Ottoman Government that you actually applied for a Tiggis Railway concession, and that Hilmi Pasha agreed in principle to your densaid (see your telegram No. 335 of the 27th September last). This communication had better be made in writing, in order to avoid all ambiguity.

It is not easy to express an opinion as to last paragraph of your telegram until we know how Minister for Foreign Affairs proposes to safeguard British continuously position, and what are the details of the scheme which he is contemplating.

I ARRANGED to see Rifast Pasha at his house to-day and told him that I wished to make clear the position of His Majesty's Government as regards their consent to the 4 per cent, merease of the customs dues, if it was still the intention of the Ottoman Government to impose that increase, as information had reached us that negotiations were proceeding between the Ottoman Government and the Bagdad Radway Company which if completed, would, five years hence, give to the Bagdad Radway Company the excess of the titles for the kilometric guarantees, amounting to about £ T. 500,000, for the construction of the final portion from El Halif to Bagdad. Refant Pasks made no attempt to deny the existence of the negotiations, but said they had not terminated. He could not see how we could object to the giving of tithes ast in the contract of the less than the last of the less I reminded his Excellency that in the original communication made to your increase, the following phrase had occurred: "Il est bien entendu que les sommes Try of the the the try of the try I to go by the proper trave and the section of the section Bagdad" This obviously had been introduced in order to get over the objections that our goods would be handlespped with the extra 4 per cent, in order to benefit the Bogdad Railway, in fact, that the money would go out of the pockets of British merchants into those of German contractors—a position difficult to justify before our Parliament-and it was obvious that the receipts other than the 4 per cent should be and the second of the second of the left not be used for furnishing exaggerated gustantees, against which we have always throughed and against which we have cadeavoured to protect them.

Rifast Pasha then went on to say that our attitude could only be interpreted by the hypothesis that we wished to obstruct the completion of the line and to leave it, as it were, "in mid air" at Habf. The Turkish Government were committed in principle to Germany as regards the completion of the line to Bagdad, and they could not risk a disagreement with that Power on the matter. He did not, however, state which is the fact, that the military authorities are pressing very hard for the conclusion of the line to linguad. I observed that they were committed when funds were available for the guarantees, and these were not available unless the 4 per cent., or their equivalent, were released. The only way in which they could become available was by some eatisfaction being given to British commerce, either by some participation in the Bugdad Railway scheme, or by the granting of a concession to us for a Bagdad-Bussorah Railway. This latter, I reminded his Excellency, had, in principle, been approved of by the ex-Grand Visier, Rilini Pasha, after consultation with some of his colleagues. To this his Excellency observed that he had not been one of them, and this was the first he had heard of the suggestion. I then briefly recounted to him my conversations with Hilmi Pasha, the conclusion of which was that Shevket Pasha, who had recently returned from Berlin, should speak to Baron Marschall with a view to bringing about some participation of Great Britain in the continuation of the line. I reminded him of the conversations that had taken place between Sir Ernest Cassell and Dr. Gwinner in In the second se section was completed, and, if necessary, Turkey could build the Bagdad-Bussorals line herself. This, however, is obviously out of the question. In the first alternative, we should have no lever left with which to negotiate with the Germans; and in the second, it is clear that they could, once in possession of the line to Bagdad, make their own terms with regard to the Turkish Bagdad Bussorah line.

I also took occasion to remind His Excollency that Hilmi Pasha, when Grand Vizier, had frequently declared to me that he would never agree to the continuation of the line on the old conditions, to which his Excellency merely observed that Hilmi Pasha was in the habit of giving promises very lightly. But the fact must not be lost night of that the military element is still supreme, and perhaps makes its influence more felt than it in I had autumn participation with the Germans in the Halif-Ragdad portion would not get over our objections as to the existence of enggerated kilometric guarantees asked whether, in the event of such a solution being found, we would grant the 4 per cent.; but ponding the clearing up of the misinderstanding referred to, I thought it wiser not to aware as to how for the Majority's Government would support a British participation that mecasianly involves kilometric guarantees.

Finally Ribon Pasha and that he would remain a his to the transport of the big conversation with Sir Charles Bardinge which he had not at hand, and that he would confer with the Grand Vizier, but in a somewhat desperate tone he added that the only way he could see out of the matter would be to abandon the request for the 4 per cent increase of the customs dues

It may not be out of place to observe that the entering into arrangements for the completion of the line from El Halif to Bagdad impliedly on the old observe conditions with what was generally believed to be the intention of their Government lost year, namely, not to proceed with the construction of the line beyond Halif, or even Aleppo, unless some considerable modification more favourable to the Ottoman Treasury were brought about.

He quoted the phrase "nothing short of absolute control " from the latter, and said that he thought that condition would create great difficulty. He suggested that "participation" was a better word than "coutrol," and that a participation of 50 per cent would, in fact, give real control, without offending in the same way the susceptibilities of the Turks as regards spheres of influences. The assent of the I seks was necessary, since, under the Bugdad Convention, the concessionnaires must obtain the assent of the Turks for handing over any part of the concession to snother party I reminded him that it would also be necessary to obtain their assent to the removal of the bar on the use of the Ragdad-Gulf section before the rest of the line was open to traffic. He thought that, if the participation were limited to 50 per cent, the assent of the Turks might be obtained, though he did not know whether Haggi I said is views were as favourable to such an arrangement as Hilm's had been. I said t-t the matter was in suspense at present for various reasons. It was not a good moment for pursuing the matter at Constantinopis; also we were awaiting the result of Money's investigations. I did not refer to the objections of the British Government form. Baron Marsehall agreed that it was not a good moment hers, since, he said, there were too many spens in the fire the new Mahamant it, I I thank Williams A coopetamian trigation, and the Bagdad-Homs Railway, as well as the question Guar-Bagdad Persian (rulf section.

As regards irregation and the Bagdad-Hems Railway, Ornstein had explained to him the paters of hearth and had a land and the bagdad-Hems line would not compete with the German Bagdad line. Baron Marschall did not that heavy traffic, such as grain, from Bagdad and country to the south of Bagdad and did not expect that a bagdad is all find its natural and the line of the line of the line would secure that traffic. He therefore, if I understood him rightly, considered that the Bagdad-Tripoli line would compete, if it competed at all,

not so much with the Bagdad-Mossoul-Alexandretta line as with the route to Bussorah, but even on this route he thought that water carriage would defeat the railway.

He referred in this connection to article 12 of the Bagdail Convention, which reserves to the Bagdail company the exclusive right to "embranchements reliant lechemin de for faisant l'objet de la présente convention à la mer en un point situé entre Meraine et Tripolis de Syrie." I suggested that this article did not cover a line reaching the sea at Tripolis itself, amos Tripoli was not "un point situé entre Meraine et Tripolis de Syrie;" but Baron Marschall said that, in his opinion, the defiantion included the two points specified as the limits.

[We had not the exact words before us at the time, but, on looking at them again, I venture to think that the Ambassador's view is quite untenable. Even if the words themselves admitted of any doubt, the meaning is clearly indicated by the fact that, when the convention was signed, a railway was actually in axistence from Adam—a point on the line—to blersins; and it was therefore obviously impossible to reserve to the Bagdad company the exclusive right of making a branch from their railway to

Raron Murechall and that Ornstein had claimed to represent "Bardac's group, including the Ottoman Bank, Cassel, and the Rothschilds." I said he represent a liardne's group, and that though I believed the Ottoman Bank had not taken formal engagements, or committed themselves to the detail of Ornstein's schemes, they were fully aware of what had been done, and there was undoubtedly an understanding that they would take part in the scheme. As regards our position, I thought it well to be frenk, and said that there was a general understanding that we would not with the French group as regards irrigation in Mesopotamia, but we were not responsible for the details of Ornstein's proposals, and, indeed, thought that Willcock's projects and of a large scheme. The understanding with the French group referred primarily to Willesche's irrigation schemes. The milway had been joined with these schemes by the French group in response, as we are told, to an invitation expressed by the Turks. We were inclined to share Baron Marschall's doubt whether a railway to the Mediterranean could get much of the expert truffic from Bagdad; but, if the railway scheme over cause to anything, it could only be in close connection with the irrigation schemes, and we should, of course, regard the understanding for common action with the French as applying to it. Marschall agreed that the railway project was clause that might be based on orticle 12 of the Bagdad Convention, he did not think that Germany would oppose the Bagdad Home Railway

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you berewith an account of a conversation which Sir H. Babington Smith has recently had with the French Ambaneador concerning the participation of English and French capitalists in ratiway and irrigation schemes in Mesopotomia. You will observe that M. Bompard stated that he believed the French group, consisting mainly of the Ottoman Bank and their supporters, and especially of M. Barine, was regarded favourably by the French Government.

It is not improbable that the desire of the military (to which I have referred in my despatch No. 198 of to-day) would in any case have forced Disvid Boy's hand, just as it that the first of the Polymer Construction of this railway.

I said I hoped that he might be able to go at the beginning of the cold weather. The delay was much to be regretted, but it was impossible to arrange with anyone also, of sufficient competence, at a moment's notice.

M. Bompard said that delay was unfortunate, as in Paris they were anxious to their desire was to proceed in concert with an English group. I earl that Mr. Mone our railway engancer, was already at Bagdad, examining the line between Bagdad and the Gulf. I said that our communications had been mainly by Bardae, and with M. Oristem, who had represented him at Constantinople, but that I understood from them, and also from M. Deffee, that the Ottoman Bank was behind M. Bardae. M. Bompard at once assented, and said that M. Bardae's relations with the Ottoman Pank were so close that he would never proceed in a matter of this land without being sure of their co-operation.

M. Bompard said that he understood that the Germans were very near concluding an arrangement for the guarantee of the line as far as Bagdad. Owing to the English condition that the 4 per cent, customs increase should not be used for that guarantee, guarantee as far as Helif. They had eleverly used this to obtain other revenues in substitution, and to apply them to the guarantee not only as far as El Helif, but all the way to Bagdad. Mesers. Ogiley, Gillanders and Co. to Foreign Office.—(Received April 8.)

Sun Court, 61, Cornhill, London, E.C., April 5, 1910.

WE have given the most careful consideration, consistently with the somewhat limited time which has been at our disposal, to the subject which we had the privilege of discussing on the 22nd ulumo with Mr. Alwyn Parker, and to the Foreign Office memorandum he communicated to us.

We understood that the two principal points upon which we were desired to express an opinion were: Firstly, the probable cost of a railway from Bagdad to Kowest, with an alignment parallel more or less to the River Tigris on the right bank; secondly, the financial basis upon which the capital required for the construction of such a railway would be forthcoming in London. As regards the-

First Point.—We are of opinion that the cost of a single-line metre-gauge railway, as proposed, should not exceed 7,500l, per unle, this figure to include rolling-stock, but it would be exclusive of the necessary charges for the expenses of floating the

This estimate of cost is considered to be sufficient to provide fully for the construction of a bridge over the Euphrates in the neighbourhood of its confluence with the Tigris, but thee not contemplate any other very important engineering works. Excluding a bridge over the Euphrates, the metre-gauge line alone abould not exceed 7,0000 per mile.

We therefore suggest that the proposal to bring the rulway within the scope of be prepared to interest ourselves in the floration of a company to be formed on

We have not been able within the short time at our disposal to fully test financial option in the City with regard to the possibility of raising the capital in London required for this particular railway on the security of the railway itself. Much would depend upon the backing given by the Governments of Great Britain, India, and Turkey. We, however, consider that the proposed guarantee would ensure cheap construction and economical working, and would give the Governments concerned the most favourable financial results.

The estimate of cost given above is only a preliminary one, in the absence of all surve s and accord the same with every reserve or less we have and the opportunity of consulting confidentially a leading firm of engineers who are personally acquainted with the country which the proposed railway would traverse, and they confirm us in our opinion that the railway should ultimately prove a financial success.

We fully believe that the railway would not only emble British interests to retain their present hold over the trade of Mesopotamia, but that it would largely increase the volume of that trade, and we further believe that the project would be popular in London, not only from a financial, but from an Imperial point of view.

TURCO-GERMAN understanding regarding continuation of the Bagdad Railway. It appeared from a report lately made by Sir G Lowther that negotiations were in progress at Constantinople for affecting to the guarantees for the sections of the line west of Bagelad the surplus of the tithes (not of the ceded revenues as stated in your telegram No. 122 of to-day). The arrangement was to take effect in five years. Sin G Lowther was instructed to point out to the Porto that, as the construction of a railway to the Gulf under exclusively German control would endanger our trade interests in Mesopotamia, our consent to the 4 per cent, increase must be conditional on such a solution of the Bagdad Railway question as would safeguard our intervals. Further, he was to intimate that in the present case an arrangement as to additional guarantees, such as that reported to be under discussion, would certainly make our consent impossible. It was insunterial whether the rulway was completed by means of revenues rused by the imposition of additional burdens on British trade or by recans of other revenues set free by the customs mercase in question. In either case, we could not consent to such a penalisation of our commerce, so long as the railway was to be continued under its present control.

GERMAN policy in Persin and Bagdad Railway Please refer to my preceding telegrams on the subject. We desire a frank exchange of views with Russia; but on the following grounds the German proposals to me of very doubtful value:—

to Bagelad Railway and any concession relating to it appear to have been ignored by the German Government

They, however, start from the assumption that a future Tehran-Khanikm line will, at their demand, be constructed with the German gauge, while, in addition, the

Bagdad-Khanikin line is to be constructed and controlled by Germany

This question seems to us to call for great firmness and caution on the part of the British and Russian Governments. We cannot contemplate the possition of our trade by any agreement with the German Government for the regulation of rates, and we do not think that any other position than that shared by other Powers should be given to tremany in Persia. We do not, however, wish to hinder, in any way, the conclusion of an arrangement between Germany and Russia, so long as these points are borne in mand.

It is, however, different when we come to consider the British sphere.

A serious measure of compensation for the concessions which they claim does not, it would seem from Sir E. troschen's telegrams, enter into the scheme of the tierman toward continuent.

f have already assumented your Excellency with my views on the question of general political understanding, but now such an understanding is represented as the absolute sine gud non of an arrangement of the Bagelad Railway question.

If, necording to the German proposals, we give Germany a share in any concession we obtain in our aphere, they will consent not to attempt to obtain concessions, railway

Thus, under this arrangement, Germany could continue the Bagdad line along the Gulf, or build a line to connect the frontier of the Russian sphere with Bushire—concessions which would undanger our whole position in the Gulf region. In such concessions we should have no share, while the only line within our sphere which is been seriously projected in a line inland from Bunder Abbas.

Further, we could not consider such an arrangement in keeping with the obligations which we are nucler to foreign Powers other than Germany, for we should

I HAVE the honour to report that, at the Imperal Chancelton's request. I call it subject of the Bagdad Badway question, and that he also desired to say a few words with regard to Perma and Germany's position in that country.

His Excellency began the conversation by stating that he was grateful for the German charge duffaires. He would be equally frank with me, and it his views did not agree any second and and the second during the second mind that it was none the less the sincere desire of both Herr von Schoen and himself to establish good relations between Germany and Great Britain. This desire had been the managering of his policy ever since he had become Importal Chancellor, not only taxes personal inclinations, but because he had realised the all-importance of the question of Anglo-German relations. It was not a question which concerned the two nations alone, it was not even only a European question, it was a question which concerned the penousions, and by making an arrangement which would not only be acceptable to the two Governments, but satisfactory to the two nations behind them.

He had rather gathered that His Majesty's Government were of opinion that the naval proposals which he had made last your were not such as would recommend themselven to the British public. He feared be must say that the idea that Germany should hand over the southern section of the Bagdad Radway to Great Britain would be Imperial sides in Germany; it was regarded as a great national undertaking, as I t with a very watchful and suspicious eye. This was, in his opinion, unfortunate, but he lelt bound to add that this regrettable feeling was chiefly due to the opposition shown by Great Britain to the undertaking from its very commencement—on attitude which was subsequently adopted by Russia and France. How would it be then if it was saddenly announced that the Imperial Government had banded over the most valuable section of the whole line to the very Power who had all along been the most bitter opponent of the scheme, and placed every obstacle in the way of its fulfilment? The Imperial Government would first be asked what return they had secured for such an enormous concession. The reply would have to be, "None whatever"; and the anger of the nation would have no bounds. Their anger, moreover, would not only be directed against the Imperial Government, but also against Great Britain. Under meh circ imstances the relations between the two countries, instead of heing improved, would be far worse than before. I pointed out to his Excellency that this might possibly be so

Government would, however, be able to show that they had secured very important advantages in return for their consent to British participation. They would be able to point out, amongst other advantages, that the consent of His Majosty's Covernment to the 4 per cent, mercuse of the Turkish customs dues—in itself a great concession in view of the great prepartierance of British trade interests in Turkey-would place the Ottoman Government in a position to find the money for the other sections of the stway, and thus facilitate their construction, and that the investment of British capital in a portion of the line would includatably give life to the whole undertaking, and enable the whole railway to be completed in a fire shorter period than would be otherwise a regarded as authory by German public opinion. The withdrawal of our opposition to in 4 per cent, mercans of Turkish customs dues would be a concession to Turkey-not to Germany; while the shortening of the period required for the conglistion of the line was a matter of convenience certainly, but not of vital necessary. The line would be completed in any case, and whether a few years earlier or later was a matter of comparatively little moment. If he was to by such conndenations before Parliament of office. His Excellency then went at some length into the reasons why the Imperial Government had to be especially coreful at this moment with regard to concessions to foreign Powers, and reminded me of all the attacks which had been made upon him, directly and indirectly, on account of the alleged want of backbone in his foreign policy. I ventured to observe to his Excellency that the opinion of the public upon any given question depended very much on the way it was put before them. He said there was some truth in that remark, but that it did not apply in the present case, when the mind people knew, or were brought to know, that the suggestion of British participation had come from the German side and from people whose interests were bound up in the undertaking they would realise that the advantages of the transaction were not likely to be wholly on the aide of Great Britain. The Chanceller answered that M Control was not the Imperial Government, nor the Deutsche Buck the German Empire. 1 and that Herr von Schoen had often apoken to me of the conversations between M. Gwinner and Sir E. Cassol, and had never expressed disapproval of them; he had certainly said that the matter would ultimately have to be discussed between the two Governments; but surely if the Imperial Government, who were cognisant of what was

- leve me, it would have simplified the utuation if they had let the two groups know THE THE PARTY OF T

and the violent attacks on the Impercal Government to which it had given rise, He then spoke more to the point and said . "After all, you must remember that the concession is ours, that we have it in our pocket; and the very fact that British interests in the Person Gulf make His Majests's Government desirous of controlling the southern Se Table 1 Tab of understanding which he had proposed last year. I reminded his Excellency our former conversations I had placed before him some of the difficultie such an understanding. He replied that he could not think they were in any a insurmout table; in any case he did not, to his great regret, see any other way the wishes of His Majesty's Government with regard to the Bugdad Radway N. gless than what he proposed would eatisfy public opinion, or pince him beyond the reproach of yielding or truckling to Great Britain.

As his Excellency seemed to wish for an expression of opinion from me as to the ments of his proposal, I said that beyond pointing out to him as I had done that there

2 C P. . The Classoellor the conreferred in your conversation with the German charge question, which in his opinion offered no great difficulty, should also form part of the political understanding he had auggested. German interests in Person were purely commercial, and Gormany had no desire to acquire political influence. His vythat an arrangement might be made somewhat on the following lines Germany should ongage not to apply for railway, telegraph, or read concessions in what was termed the British aphore of influence, that in return His Majesty's Government should giv . manurance that German capital and German industry should not be each fed from a -share of the contracts and sayply of material necessary for the working of mone of the above nature as Ilis Majorty's Government might of should come their assurances with regard to the open door in Pers. mount, amongst other things, that Germany should have equal parts . . . other third Powers in loans and such official positions under the Persian Government as might be open to foreigners.

These to the proposals which the imperial Government had made to the Russian Government in 1906, proposals to which M. Isvolsky had up till now not replied. These proposals were still open, and in return for the concessions which termining was ready to make and they must be regarded as concessions, as Germany really had an untirely free hand in Persia—the Imperial Government would require that the railway projected by Russia between Tehran and Khanekin should be constructed, and that on its completion on assurance should be given that the Russian Government would not throw obstacles in the way of international trathe between Hagdad and Tehran by special tariff and customs measures. His Excellency explained that an assurance of this kind was of as much importance to Great Britain as to foreign merchanishes for North Person had been probletted by Russia, thus leaving the available to foreign trade. The heavy transport rates on the caravan road were an effectual bar to any competition with the Trans-Caucanan routes, if therefore Russia, we completed the North Persian railway system by the addition of a line from Julfa Tohran, and at the same time did not construct the line from Tehran to Khanekin, she would practically assure to herself a trade monopoly in North Persia. Under and

erroundances an assurance of the open door would be illusory

His Excellency midded that he had now remon to believe that M. Invokicy contemplated anding his long-delayed answer to the German proposals, and he hoped versuch that it would be of a satisfactory nature, all the more that an understanding wit Russia would obviously amouth the way to an arrangement with Great Bestain on the lipus he had indicated. This was the close of our conversation.

As I saw the Chancellor spoke from appoun type written notes, I told has Excellency that, in view of the length and importance of the conversation, it would perhaps be safer, and ensure the accurate repetition of his views, if he would let me have a memorandum of what he had said. His Excellency kindly said that he would it did not arrive, and I had to go to Mecklenburg-Strelitz on the day after, I thought it best to writ no longer and to telegraph to you the chief points of the conversation as I remembered them. On my return from Neu-Strelitz Herr von Stumm brought me round the memorandum, and as I found that the Chancellor had somewhat amy lifted the part dealing with Russia, it seemed to me advanable to send you an additional telegram giving more or less his Excellency a exact words.

I have now the bonour to transmit herewith copy and translation of the Chancellor's memorandum, which, except for the amphification as regards Russia, agrees in substance with my first telegram.

The memorandum naturally differs from the conversation as regards the form and it, the memorandum naturally differs from the conversation as regards the form and it, the conversation with me, laid more stress on the necessity for Russia to build the Tehran-Khanikin Railway than would appear from the memorandum. But I would venture to observe that the pointed allosion made by the Chancellor to the consequences which would ensue if the Russian Government determined to build a line from Julfa to Tehran, and to leave the Tehran-Khanikin line unbuilt, would essent the part forward by his Excellency as one of the requirements of the Imperial tions, and to explain fully and confidentially my standpoint in respect to the Bugdad Rala life Per-as you a

I see from the reports of the chargé d'affoires that Sir E. Grey regards the unreserved consent of England to the proposed increase in the Turkish customs as sufficient compensation for the cession to England of the preponderating influence in the Gulf section of the Bagdad Bailway. I cannot agree with this view

The Bagdad Radway Company has been definitely granted the concession by the Ports to build the radway from Konia to a point on the Persian Gulf which as still to be fixed. The section from Ragdad to the Gulf constitutes one of the most important parts of the whole hae, and one which has the richest future in store for it. In view of the Fire and reconstituting the second second would be regarded by public opinion in Germany as a weak concession to England on the part of the Imperial Government. Sir E. Grey is not unaware how for I have to recken with German public opinion. This was recently made additionally clear by the THE RESERVE TO THE PERSON OF T in Germany is following the Bagriad Bullway question with quite exceptional interest. I am only stating the facts when I say that the press has-much against the wish of the Imperial Government and the financial circles concerned-stamped this question almost as one of first-class rational importance, shiefly on account of the opposit on which the British Government raised with regard to the project—un opposition which was also taken up by Russia and France. In these circumstances oven Germann of quiet and moderate views would not understand a special agreement about the railway, by which the Imperial Government, without sufficient equivalent in return, renounced in England's favour rights granted by the Ports in the exercise of her sovereignty. Under no circumstaneon can England a unreserved consent to the 4 per cent, increase of Torkish customs be regarded as a sufficient equivalent. This step would in reality be facilitate the Porte's task to fullilling her obligations with regard to the Bugded Bailway Company. Boudes, even the maintenance of the reserve would only have the effect of delaying the construction of the line. It would by no means completely frustrate it,

The second secon consent to the increase of the customs cannot be considered as an equivalent, it remains the state of the s Unif metion other concessions can be found which could be regarded as a good pro que on the part of England.

I have considered this question thoroughly, and am convinced that no quid pro que can be found which would justify, from the German standpoint, a separate agreement respecting the Bagdad Radway. I should, by the conclusion of a separate agreement, respect to England. As Sir E. Grey is aware, I cherish amoure wishes for the lasting establishment of confidential and friendly relations between Germany and a But by this represed I should, without doubt, thwart the realisation of those and in .... . German public opinion genuine ground for animouty not only towards the set towards England. Under these circumstances, I sen, to my regret, n - possibility of an understanding about the Bagdad Razlway than the conclusion of a general political agreement (" Gesamtabkommen") between Germany and England, of which this question should form a part. I am convuseed that a general agreement of this kind is the only thing that can save me from the charge that in the Bagdad Railway question I have openly sounded the retreat before English

An understanding with regard to Persia ought, on the other hand, scarcely to offer and difficulties. Germany is prosecuting commercial areas in Persis. Her interests " or agreement of the 31st August, 1907—the independence and integrity of Pursus,

As early as 1906 M Isvolsky submitted to the Imperial Government the proposal fr I to I all at It was the art nteelf ready to renounce, in favour of Russia and within a part of Northern I a war to be a series of the roads, and telegraphs. In return for this Germany's essential demands are, for the O . . it is trained as a server the many

e railway hans planned by Russia in Northern Persa with the future 1 he in line and for the assurance that Russia will not prejudice the international tradic on this line by customs and turns measures. This demand is equally in the the interdation which has existed since 1883 against the passage in transit of foreign to be to rough Trans to the caravan route of Trezbond-Erzeroum-Tabreen Tebran. On account of the high transport dues this caravan route can even now no longer compete as a trade route to North Persia with the way of importation by Trans-Caucasia. If Russia should now develop the railway system of Northern Persia by a line from Julfa to Tebran, and should, on the other hand, not establish the Ezeroum-Khanekm connection, ucceeds in securing to herself a manopoly of the trade of Northern Persia.

Property of the questions which have now aroun in regard to Persia between the Cabinets. An understanding with Russia would materially am perresponding agreement with England. For an agreement of this pro que to the effect in the exploitation of the concessions in question a percentage of participation should be kept open for German industry. An authoritic interpretation of the open door in Persia would also be of value to me to the effect that in loan questions affecting the reorganisation of the Persian financial rmany should be placed on a par with all other third Great Powers.

From the Garman point of view, an agreement of the nature with regard to Persia could also best be made led in a general political agreement with England.

No. 45.

Sir H. Babington Smith to Sir C. Hardings,-(Received April 18.)

Constantinople, April 11, 1910.
I DULY received your letter of the 12th March on the subject of the Bagdad I alway, and the note from the Bagdad Rudway Committee which you enclosed. I have studied them both with great attention, and the importance of the question must be my excuse if I reply in some detail.

Before coming to the quention of policy, it may be convenient that I should begin by dealing with the figures.

As regards the cost of the line in general, I have no means of checking in detail the figures given by the committee. The committee admit that the cost of the two difficult sections cannot be estimated with any processes, and I about doubt if the engineers of the company themselves can frame an accurate estimate beforehand. From such information as I have, it appears that the cost of the two difficult sections will probably exceed by about 10 per cent, the figure of the committee, and after careful examination I think it would not be exceeding to add 10 per cent, for unforcemen contingencies to their total estimate of 18,615,000%, making 14,976,500%. This leaves a margin of a little under 4,000,000% on the whole

Whether the margin is 4,000,000d, or 5,000,000d, I have no desire to contend that it is not excessive, or that the Turks have not made a bad bergain. But at the name time it is necessary to make an important qualification before this cathering the stration. The arrangement regarding the stratic grows to any substantial amount, that large provision ought to be made in the shape of reserves to meet definiences in the working account. I am not quite sure that you have realised the full effect of the conditions as to traffic receipts; but I will deal with this matter in connection with your comparison of the existing concession with the "Indian" system of guarantee.

The point, however, which more directly concerns us is not the cost of the whole line, but that of the Hagdad-Gulf section, in which we wish to participate.

With reference to your criticisms of my remarks on this subject. I may explain that when writing of "terminal arrangements" I was not referring to the construction of ports at Bagdari and Bussorah. These are, as you point out, on a separate footing. I referred rather to the provision of sidings, goods yards, engine-sheds, repairing-shops, offices, &c., and the more expensive character of the station buildings required at a term of the German route is followed there will be only one bridge across the Euphrates on the main line; but if arrigation progresses in the country between the rivers a branch may be necessary to carry off the produce; while if the route recommended by Wilcocks is adopted, it would be necessary to have a branch to Kerbela and Nedjef. In each of the cases a second bridge would be required.

There are other circumstances too, special to Mesopotanus, which add to the cost of railway construction there. The freight of railway material to the Persian Gulf is much higher than to the Mediterraneau. All materials would have to be brought from a distance. There is no wood to be obtained locally, and the nearest stone is, I believe, at Hit, a hundred miles beyond Bagdad.

Taking these various elements into account, reither the committee's estimate nor Dr. Gwinner's figure for the Koma-Eregli section can be taken as sufficient for the Bagdad-Gulf section. It is not much use speculating further on the subject, since in two or three months we shall have the more secure ground of an actual survey; but I may say that at present the best estimate we have been able to obtain puts the cost at 6,0001 per kilometre, without including contractor's profit or interest during construction. This figure is given us by a leading firm of radway engineers. It is based on an actual aurvey (made fifteen years ago) of part of the Bagdad-Gulf line and a reconnaissance of the rest, and it is, I think, of more value than Sir Jamus Mackay's obter dictum or the figures of the committee, which are not, so far as I am aware, founded on any survey or examination of the local conditions.

I now come to your comparison between the cost to the Government of the existing Recollection to the transfer to as a feat 5,000f, per kilometre is the probable cost of the line. Even on this assumption (which, 45 I have explained, I behave to be too sanguine), the real remits of the comparison are less favourable to the " Indian " system than your figures appear to show, since no account eat the state of t onerous to the company, and correspondingly favourable to the Government. You point out, as a strong argument in favour of the "Indian" system, that "the liability would come as mon as the rulway realised a net profit of 5 per cent. (a state of things which ought soon to come about in the fertile districts of Mesopotamia)"; and you regard the construction annuity under the Bugdad concession as irreducible, except by the operation of the anking fund. There is a double misapprehension here. The operation of the sinking fund has no effect whatever on the amount of the annual which, as usual, provides both interest and sinking fund in equal annual instalmer a But, on the other hand, as traffic increases, the reduction of the total amount pays would be much more rapid under the arrangements of the Bagdad concession than under the "Indian" system, and though the initial amount might be greater under the former, it would disappear much sooner. I may point out, in possing, that the initial liability figure on the impossible supposition that the railway had no traffic at all, This can be best demonstrated by actual figures. In order to make a comparison of the cost to the Government of the two systems it is of course necessary to make an secumption as to the relation of working expenses to revenue under the system. I assume that 60 per cent, of the gross recepts would be allowed for a figure which is equal to the average for all the In finn railways in 1908, ..... w to the state of th I see that the see of all a real to the second of th easumed cost of 716 kilom, of line, You suggest, to allow the necessary sheald be it is a second of the second of th long to a series of the series

Grai	n Traffic R Edomet		- 1	Amount payable ( - by, + to) the Government under the existing volumession	Amount payable (- by, + to) the Government under the "Todian" steem.

The traffic is small the "Indian" system has the advantage, but you will see that a ret is the first of the f

the case of the time, as we have the force in your argument that the traffic in the working account, there is no doubt force in your argument that the traffic in the trust of the section between, may, Harrin and Alexandretta, which opens up fertile control to the or carringe. But in any case, whatever the validity of the argument, the time of the argument, force in a strong position for fixing their own price.

You doubt whether their position is no strong as it appears to me; but even since I wrote last it has become materially stronger. As you are aware, the convention for the second and third series of the Bagdad loan amount £ T. 420,000 from the surplus of all increase in the customs dutice. This gives a claim on any surplus aroung from a further than the customs dutice. This gives a claim on any surplus aroung from a condition laid down by the British Government for assenting to such increase, the Turks are the loss provides. They have thus claim upon a clause in the "convention additionnello" of the 2nd June, 1908;—

"L'excédent des revenus concédés à la Dette publique ayant été affecté au prolongement de la ligne de Bagdad . . . "

This fresh guarantee is to apply to the line not only as far as Helif, but as far as Bagdad,

In making this arrangement, Djavid believed that he was taking a course who would be accepted by the British Government, since Tewfik Pasha had informed the Porto unit the British France and the British France to the assignment of revenues for the guarantee of the line as far as Bagdad, provided that those revenues were not derived from the increase of the customs duties. It is evident that there was an unfortunate misunderstanding somewhers. Djavid Bey had seen the telegram from Tewfik Pasha, and said that it was quite explicit in its times.

When I saw Djavid Bey a week ago, there was still not a complete agreement on the subject, since the Germans had not finally accepted Djavid's condition that the surpluses should be paid over to the Ottoman Government, and paid by them to the

I inderstand that the Turks have now been informed that the assignment of substituted revenues would not be regarded by His Majesty's Government as satisfactory. This will suspend the affair for the moment; but how is it to be brought to a solution! It seems to me that there are two courses. The first is that which you are adopting—to endeavour to block further progress for the Germans in order to force them to obtain a modification of the concession in the sense you desire, that is, I understand, a modification which will amend the arrangements for the working guarantee, and will diminish the margin of profit, which you regard as excessive.

But, so far as concerns the line from Konin to Hagdad, in which we do not ask to full the Turks themselves were striving to obtain a modification and claimed our support, we might help them; but as a matter of fact, they are by no means grateful for the obstacles which the British Government three to interpose against the assignment of further revenues, since these mine obstacles prevent the Turks from runing further revenues of which they have urgent need. This is, no doubt, short-sighted on their sees the line finished, and are not much impressed by financial considerations. If, then, we take a strong stand against an arrangement which we regard as extravagant, but which they wish to carry out, we shall earn no thanks, and shall probably arrive at no good for the Turks.

The other course, which I have ventured to advocate, is to accept the terms which we know the Germans are prepared to give, and to endeavour to modify the form of the concession for the part which concerns us after we have secured our footing. I go to the concession for the part which concerns us after we have secured our footing. I go to the concession for the part which is that if we let the present opportunity pass, we may find that the Germans can do without us. If they succeed in obtaining the sanction of the Ottoman Parliament for the extension of guarantees which I have done they have the means of going on for five years or more, and it appears to me hopeless to could be built without a guarantee, and the Turks would never accept a scheme for building it under the guarantee of a forage Government.

The attuation as regards the Begild Homa Railway has become somewhat clearer since I last wrote. I enclose a memorandum of a conversation which I recently had with M. Bompard.* I cannot help thinking that M. Cambon most have been under some meanderstanding as regards Orastem and the Ottoman Bank. the total Haranina

We. Money, our cogneer, is making good progress, and according to the last the should be back here about the beginning of June, and in coming back he will follow the route proposed by Wilcocks for the Bagdad-Homs Railway. We shall therefore in the course of the summer have fuller materials for forming an opinion on the railway question.

See enclosure la No. 30.

As regards the irrigation schemes, with which the mitway is necessarily linked, we shy to go to Mecopotamia this spring. I hope that it may be possible to arrange for his go g at the freeds are anxious to hurry on, and also because the Turke will certainly require further financial assistance in the autumn, and this will tend to force on to a solution all questions which are connected with the increase of the customs.

M. Bardae has pressed me to arrange a meeting with him in order to discussmatters further, and I have said that I shall be able to go to Paris early in May.

As regards the position here, the feeling excited by the Lynch affair has for the time subsided, but it appears clear that there is no prospect of the scheme passing in the form which it has hitherto taken. It is most desirable from all points of view to obtain a settlement, and if possible, a settlement which, while securing British interests, and is possible, a form can be found which would attain this result. I feel sure that it would be one policy to support it the 22nd or 23rd. Will you let me know (at 29, Hyde Park Gate) when it would be convenient to you for me to call at the Foreign Office?

Yours uncorely,

Minute by Mr. Purker.

Since the intimation of Herr iven Bethmann Hellweg that Germany would only admit our participation in the Bagelad Radway provided she received in return compensation in some other quarter, the question of the co-operation of this country in the undertaking has been ruled out for the present, and the subjects discussed in this letter have an interest which is accordingly only academic.

There are, however, certain conclusions in this letter which seem to be almost untonable, and, before passing to details, I would draw attention to the arguments upon which they are founded.

Firstly.—Sir II. Habington Simth admits that, even if the branches are excluded from consideration, there will, under the concession of 1903, be a probable surplus of 4,000,0000, or thereshouts from the construction annuity, this surplus being the sum which would remain over and above the actual cost of building the main line.

which would remain over and above the actual cost of building the main line.

It has a made a bull bargain; but he seeks to justify the extravagant sum the seeks to justify the seeks to justify the extravagant sum the seeks to justify the seeks to justify the extravagant sum the seeks to justify the seeks to justify

I am not sure, writing as I do without technical knowledge, whether a milway would pay when the gross receipts were under 4,500 fr per kilometre; but it is obvious that, under the 1903 concession, the railway would pay the company still less if the gross receipts exceeded 4,500 fr. than if they were less than that sum; clearly, therefore, it is the first than the progressive development of truffic, and therefore against the purely commercial success of the milway.

Anyhow, so long as the company keep the gross kilometric receipts below 4,500 fr. the deficit, after deducting from these gross receipts the "working expenses," should not be very large, if, indeed, it exists at all, especially since rolling-stock does not, in the case of the Bagdad Railway, come under the cost of "working expenses," since rolling-stock is provided under the charge of construction in all estimates made both in this Office and by Sir H. Batangton Smith.

It seems, therefore, somewhat magnificent to set aside 4,000,000L or more from the sum provided as construction guarantees, merely in order to meet a definit in "working expenses" which the company can reduce to a minimum, or perhaps altogether wipe out, by keeping the gross kilometric receipts below 4,500 fr. per kilometre

Secondly.—It will be noted that in the comparative tabular statement set out on p. 2 of the printed copy of Sir H Bahington Smith's letter, be omits all reference to a state of affairs where the gross traffic receipts would be under 4,500 fr. per kilometre; yet it would seem that under the concession of 1908 the company would, as shown above, have every advantage in restricting the traffic below that figure, and if they did so the company made would be markedly favourable to the "Indian" system.

Thirdly.—The tabular statement, which relates merely to the Gulf sections, does not contrast the terms of the Bagdod Railway concession with the "Indian" system pure and simple, but with the "Indian" system as handscapped by preliminary payment of I is the state o

Needless to say, if the 1,400,000l were eliminated, and the two systems then contrasted on an equal basis, as regards their attractions for the Turkish Treasury the figures would not favour the terms of the German concession of 1908, as shown or, a

£	* 815,040 160,160 - 157,540 + 14,020 + 83,056	### ### ### ##########################

Fourthly.—To take construction alone, in the first instance;—the amount payable by the Turks in respect of the Gulf arctions would, under the 1903 concenion, be 315,0401, a-year, as Sir H. Baoington Sunth admits. Under the "Indian" system it would be 200,0001 (at 5 per cent.) plus, it is true, 4,0001, a-year for capital redemption or anking fund. This not very large item of 4,0001, a-year we had not included in our former estimate. For countraction, therefore, the hability of the Turks would be 315,0401, a-year under one system, and only 204,0001, under the other.

To take now working expenses alone -

Under the German concession the arrangement is admittedly obstructive to the pragress to the gross recessors would, as Sir H Balangton Smith suggests and as we have throughout assumed, be allowed for working the remaining 40 per cent of the gross receipts would be revenue, and, if and when this item sufficed to cover 5 per cent to the shareholders as interest, any surplus over that 5 per cent, would be divimble between the Government and the company, and—an important point of contrast—it would be to the interest of both Government and company to develop traffic and herease revenue.

The upshot of all this is that the German concession arrangements can only be d t [14] the manufactory of the first that the German concession arrangements can only be d t [14] the manufactory of the first transfer of execution, nor, unleed, calculated to give reliable results in the long run.

I cannot help feeling that the original promoters of the Bagdad Radway concession, when they agreed to the terms of that concession, must have made up their minds to pocket the profits on construction, -st apres cela le déluge.

There was firster spect of this postion I would again recall and that is that if we had agreed to be there proposed to be us the Region. Got sector and to mulet us 2,000 a know, so respect that the time als will have well red by the lion's share of the profits under the 1903 concession, while we should merely have incorred the odium of it.

Now, however, Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg has placed his veto even upon

Dr. Gwinner's slender generosity.

I pass now to one or two minor points of Sir H. Babington Smith's letter :--

He says that the initial liability of the Turkish taxpayer could never amount in practice to 433,1801, since it could only reach that figure on the assumption that the ranway and no tenthout all this is more but by the "years " may mum" we meant a sum which could not be exceeded as Sir C. Hardings pointed out in his letter under reply, "the working guarantee is not a fixed amount."

It is also true that under article 35 of the concession of 1903 the construction generates following per known and feel at the whole direction of the ce essent and will be one that the tracelland the restanting cash yield of the bonus, as the case for the mil of the latter to Government as a matter of fact we have always done so in previous calculations, and it was an oversight that the same basis of calculation as usual was not adopted in the draft of Sie C. Hardinge's letter to Sir H. Balangton Smith, but the net results of the two enleulations are not very different,

Passing now to p. 3 of the printed copy of Sir H Babington Smith's letter, I quite agric will be ven that the convention

additionnelle" of June 1908 is untenable.

The important part of this letter from a practical point of view is that Sir II all ages for the letter from a practical point of view is that he was the state of the transfer of the transf now ar well of some or and a land to a will consider a side ongment to make railway surveys along the trace of the Bagdad Railway Since reis now no question of our participation in the Bagelor Railway Sir E. Mr. Ma.mon put himself in communication with my group in virtue of these views, and by a letter dated 10th December, 1909, I declared to the Turkish trovernment that certain friends of my firm are willing to provide a sum of 160,000,000 fr. for the purpose of carrying out the construction of the railway contemplated in the concession asked for by Youssouf Said Bey. This sam will be considerably more than is now required for the purposes of the construction of the railway as at present contemplated, which is as I have said above, a railway from House to Bagulad.

No. 48.

Sir Edward Grey to Sir G. Lowther.

(No. 107. Secret ) Foreign Office, April 20, 1910. Ottoman Minister for Foreign Affairs, while denying that negotiations on the subject were in progress between the Sublime Porto and the parties concerned, with a the his partle bear of the age is it the Brankel Radings from PI H I is Ragilad by means of the allocation of the surplus revenues of the tithes which would be available for kilometric guarantees in 1915. The second of th fundamental change in the attitude assumed by the Ottoman Government only a few months ago in regard to the Bagdad Radway concession of 1903, -a concession tends to confirm an impression that the Ottoman Government, by disregarding the well-known views and wishes of the Majesty's Government, no longer recognise that community of interest which, in the critical period following upon the revolution of finally, it foreshodows the progress of an enterprise which, as at present controlled and unless rendered innocuous by the execution of protective and countervailing · 1 _ 1, 1 1 1, 1 . . . in Mesopolamia, as well as to affect political usues of the greatest magnitude in the of the Indian Empire, the commercial interests of Great Britain have long been recognised as predominant to those of all other European States. It will be convenient that I should deal with these important subjects under distinct and separate headings. Firetly, as regards the Bagdad Radway Convention of 1903, your Excellency was the corrupt and obscurantest rule of the ex-Sultan Abdul Hannd, were first materially altered. His Majesty's Government had cordully shared the estimate formed by Hilms Pashn of the concession: and the failure both in 1903 and subsequently to enlist Tr , d. * .. 1 of the contraston, be positive upon furker burdens altogether of firm to con to the advantages it is likely to confer, where the services and the services are the services and the services are the services and the services are the services a result owing to some extent to the disinclination of the present helders of the concesson to e t t + -, f , I on handous sarantage had and lutking Exchaquer, which His Majesty's Government desired to see introduced into the scheme of the ocncession as regards its application to the Person Gulf section.

II . I'm if the accumpant or area upon a detailed exposure of the objections to which the terms of the convention of 1903 might reasonably be subjected, the more so since those objections are sufficiently patent from a perusal of the document in question; but I shall touch upon certain salient points which appear particularly displyantaments to the time of the Table Cost at all all taxpayer.

Under article 35 two guaruntees are instituted, the one a working-expenses guarantee, the other for purposes of construction the first is arranged upon such a scale that it directly militates against the progressive development of traffic, and therefore against the commercial success of the line, the other is calculated upon a biess so extenyagent that, even if the main line alone be taken into consideration, there should remain at the disposal of the promoters funds exceeding by several millions of pounds the actual cost of construction, while, if the branch lines were included in the estimate, the surplus would be still higher. It is on these grounds that His Majesty's Governthank are marble to server . I st find I as he is seen of suggines trustmay concession: they counder that there would be manifest advantages in substituting a form of magniful ampropriate or it is a fit of the fluid of built of property a monomum rate of interest is assured upon the capital actually employed in constructions and working a reality divided between the Government and the railway company: this system is productive of economy in construction and efficiency in working, factors which are indispensable in order to secure commercial success and satisfactory results,

Secondly, as regards the attitude of the Sublime Porte towards British interests, His Majosty's Government are far from suggesting that the Ottoman Government are at liberty to disregard their contractual obligations under the Bagdad Railway Convention simply and solely because those obligations, though concluded with evident disregard of her real interests, are burdensome to Turkey, what they do take exception to is the fact that the Ottoman Government, while showing no inclination to their on the event of the a continue met order meaning however modest in character, from British subjects, have apparently contemplated certain financial arrangements tend and the claims and to lancers the progress of the Bugdad Bailway towards the Persian Guif and immunich as those arrangements causes become operative until the year 1915, the solicitude of the Ottoman Government to band thomselves without further delay and to smooth the way for a menopoly of the economic exploitation of the country cannot but cause serious misgiving and some tia Majoriy's Government, by manifestations of practical sympathy, have given tangelile proof of their desire to contribute towards that regeneration which is the foundation of all administrative reform; yet it appears that the Ottoman Government, at a time when they are desirous, on the one hand, of mising the customs duties op foreign imports from 11 per cent, to 15 per cent, are ready on the other hand to go out of their way to promote the prosecution of an enterprise admittedly burdensome to the Turkish Exchequer, without so much as attempting by negotiation with the concessionnaires to bring about an alleviation of the burdens which that outerprise will involve.

In the face of these considerations, His Majesty's Government are reluctantly constrained to believe that the Ottoman Clovernment, oblivious of the services rendered by Great Restaur decomp the V of 1" . It a Little ato demberacy promoting at all costs the progress of the Bagdad Radway on its present basis and thereby undermining the commercial position of this country in Mesoputamin which the bean figures established in the state of the best of the best Interests in Mesopotamia, and the disturbance of the status qua which the Bogdad Railway is calculated to effect.

The commercial position of Great Britain in the Mesopotamian delta is altogether exceptional: that position has been steadily consolidated since the foundation, upwards of two and a half centuries ago, of the first English factory at Bussorah; in 1766 a British Resident was appointed at Bagdad; at Bussorah there has long been a British consul, charged with the care of British trade, represented up to a recent date by 96 per cent, of the shipping coming into the port; in short, such is now the nature of these commercial interests that the trude of Bagdad and Bussorah, valued at 2,500,000l. in 1903, is predominantly in the bands of British and Indian merchants : moreover, it may be mentioned incidentally that the annual prigrimage of British-Indian subjects to the Shigh shrines of Kerbela and Nejef is continually moregang, the numbers in 1905 exceeding 11,000. -a circumstance which serves to emphasise the interest which this region must possess for British Indian traders and commerce

The position attained by this country upon the waters and on the sheres of the Persian Gulf has been won not without the expenditure of many nullions of money and the sacrifice of many valuable lives : in the early years of the nineteenth centi-slave trade was rampant in the Gulf, and the vessels of the Indian Marine were e in a long and arduous struggle with the Arab pirates who infested its southern coasts : this conflict, which was conducted entirely by British agency and means, without any help from the Ottoman Government, resulted in the establishment of treaty relations with the Amb chiefs, under which they bound themselves to observe perpetual peace and to refer all disputes to the British Resident at Bushire. The par Bestonness which has ever since, with rare exceptions, been maintained, is the issue of these arrangements.

expenditure of British lives and money, that the Persian Gulf, not excluding the apprenches to the Turkish ports of Ragdad and Busserah, is at this moment open to the navigation of the world, indeed to these causes alone it may be said that the eraborne trade of Mesopotamia owes its very existence. The situation of Great not sought territorial acquiactions in those regions, she has for generations borne burdens there which no other nation has ever undertaken anywhere, except in the capacity of sovereign; she has had duty thrust upon her without dominion; she has kept the peace amongst people who are not her subjects; has patrolled, during upwards of two centuries, waters over which she has enjoyed no formal lardship, has kept, in strange ports, an open door through which the traders of every met might have as free access to distant markets as her own.

I have dwelt at some length upon the position of Great Britain in Mesopotamia and the Persian Gulf because it is desirable that the Ottoman Government should be able to appreciate fully the dicturbance of long-established interests which the Bagdad Railway, the most direct route between this country and the Indian Empire, is likely to entail. This will appear the more accurate when it is recalled that under the terms of the concession, the promoters of that enterprise not only are entitled to establish ports at the important trade centres of Bagelad and Bussorah, but under various articles a number of minor but valuable rights are conferred upon the cy you from customs does for all materials, machinery, rolling-stock, iron, wood, ported from abroad during the period of construction, and exemption from taxation of the company's entire property and revenue during the whole term of the concession; mining and quarrying and forest rights within a zone of 20 kilom, on either side of the railway; the right to establish warehouses, elevators and shops, to manufacture bricks and tiles, and to make free use of any natural water power in the vicinity of the line-all tending to confor a monopoly of the economic development of the country.

It has been incumbent on His Majesty's Government to consider most carefully in what manner they can legitimately, and with due regard to the economic and general welfare of the important Ottoman provinces concorned, prevent the establishment of 1 0 7 171 . the destruction of British commercial interests which it would perforce accomplish; maintain un open door for the trade of all nations; and protect the larger interests in Inche and the Persian Gulf which the completion of the Bugdad Radway, as at present controlled, is destined to influence.

They have come to the conclusion that the only course now open to them which could at the same time promote the objects in view would be the construction of a "protective" railway. I have therefore to request your Excellency to renew the application which you have already made to the Ottoman Government for a railway concession along the valley of the River Tigris; the precise course of the line would be a matter for subsequent arrangement; what His Majesty's Government at present degre that the Cilic Pet should be their plates fow him that the line would approximately follow the valley of the Tigns from Bagdad to Kut-el-Amara, and that from that point it would proceed in a south-easterly direction to B and address that ye at he a D conference y went answay sepend upon the gauge and the results of the surveys, but Ibs Majesty's Government would not call upon the Ottoman Government for any guarantee whatsoever, and they would be prepared to recommend a group of financiers of high standing who would provide for the construction and working of the line under a Turkish company

I HAVE the honour to report that work has just commenced upon two small sections of the Bagdad line. One small section of about 6 kilom, has been given in contract to an Italian, and the latter has begun throwing up earthworks, the work is towards Adama, and starts from a village about half way between this town and Missis. Another small section, also towards Adams, has been given over to an Austram, who has just left for Missis, and will start work from there on Monday the 11th.

Work will probably be begun upon various sections shortly, notably from Yenidje towards the Erigh branch, and at various spots between Adams and Missis, but the two sections mentioned above, are the first upon which operations have, as yet, been commenced. It is interesting to note that, contrary to what was expected, no official ceremony has marked the beginning of work upon the Bagdad has in this district, although, perhaps, some such ceremony may take place when work is really started in

April 28, 1910. Dear Mr. Mailet,

I ENCLOSE for your information a copy of a letter I received to-day from M. Tardisu. In this letter M. Tardiou sets forth the alterations in the terms of the agreement already approved by M Inches, which the latter new wishes to make after his recent interview in Puris with M. Cambon.

Instead of half the capital being found by the British and French financiers respectively, he now proposes that 60 per cent should be found by the French and 40 per cent, by the English

Instead of the director-general of the Anglo-French Company being English, as providesly agreed, he now decree that the director-general should be a Frenchman. Instead of the members of the "conseil" being half French and half English, be now proposes that five should be French and only three English.

Instead of half of the material being supplied from France and helf from England, he now proposes that three-fifths be supplied by France and two-fifths by England. It seems to me that the modifications proposed will make the company entirely French instead of Anglo-French. After consulting with my friends, I have come to company, and that the torms now substituted by M Pichon for those which he had already agreed, should be adopted, would practically eliminate British interests from the line. We propose, therefore, to urge M. Pichon either to restore the conditions that the derector-general should be an Englishman, or to agree to divide the whole railway into two sections, the mileoge of which should be as six to four, and that the langer action, which would form a junction with the Syrian railways, should be constructed entirely by the French, and the shorter section by the English, and that after completion the two sections should be worked as one railway under a joint board. If it be found impressible to arrange some such terms as these, it may well be need - The for Youwand Said Boy to proceed with his application independently of French support. If he succeeds, and after all he will have this in his favour that he will at touch have no German opposition to face, at least, if he falls in with their suggestion to take his line to Aleppo, owing to his agreement with me, a copy of which I enclose, the radway will have to be worked under British control. I leave to-day for Paris to confer with M Tardieu.

no clause which confers on the holders of the concession a mone, y of railway construction in Mesopotamin; indeed, according to article 42, it is laid down that the milway. Moreover, it cannot equitably be contended, apart altogether from the terms of the convention of 1963, that, because a concession for a railway has been granted to certain promoters along one specified alignment, the Ottoman Government are spec facto debarred from granting a further concession to other parties when that concession is for a railway destined to serve another district. Such a contention, if advanced, would be utterly preposterous; and incomuch as it is stipulated in article 34 that all disputes respecting the execution and interpretation of the convention of 1903 shall be settled in the Ottoman courts, the ultimate decision as to what the Ottoman Government may and may not do with regard to granting further concessions would rest with those courts and with no foreign Power.

The German Government have definitely informed His Majesty's Government that British participation in the Bagdad Rulway will not be admitted on terms which His Majesty's Government could possibly approve. In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government renew the application, to which the ex-Grand Vizier acceded in principle in September last, for an entirely separate concession as indicated in the enclosed despatch to His Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople. The reception with which this renewed application may meet will, as stated in the despatch, affect the future relations of this country towards the Ottoman Empire.

THE French Ambassador called on the 21st ultime, and spoke at some length about the proposed Home Bugdad Rudway. It appeared that the French Government bad asked formally for the concession, and that they intend to press for it, with the support of His Majorty's Government, at Constantinople. As regards the project of M. Tardien and Mr. Barry, or indeed, the scheme of anybody class, the French Government would decline to consider them until the concession had been obtained nor were they prepared to commit themselves to any company, French or foreign, ontil they were in a position to know the conditions which the Turkish Government would demand. M. Tardien was going to see M. Cambon on the following morning, and his Excellency would speak to this gentleman in the above sense.

Mr Barry appears to have given the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to Sir C Hardings explained to M Cambon that he had himself made it quite clear to Mr Barry that his Majorty's Government regarded the Bardad-Homa Railway as a future French concession, in which British participation had been invited, and that Mr Barry could only expect the support of his Majorty's Government if his group and scheme had received the support and approval of the French Government

TO-DAY the German charge d'affaires, after meutioning a point of detail about Persia, which I have recorded separately, enquired what was my view as to present to discuss an agreement with Germany as to Persia in the light of what Herr von Bethmonn-Hollweg had said.

I replied that I had not seen much material for an agreement in what Herr von liethmann-Hellweg had said about Persia, and with regard to the Bagdad Railway his attende had been discouraging. I had sent his proposals to the Prime Minister: but I had not seen the latter for about three weeks now. I knew he had been very fully occupied before Parliament rose last week, and I did not expect to see him until a fortnight hence. Therefore, although I intended to write my own personal reflections to you, I did not think I could discuss the matter further in conversation at present.

The German charge d'affaires had evidently anticipated that we would be disappointed by what had been said about the Bagdad Railway and the navy, and he well to make progress first with the Persian matter. Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg was well to commercial rights which Germany had in Persia by treaty, unless he was able to prove to German public opinion that he had obtained some quid pro que. The Persian question might become argent soon, because, though the negotiations for a loan had to out through for the moment, the Persian Government were much in need of money.

and we and Russia might secure all the milways in return for a loan. The charge d'affaires mentioned the promise which we already held with regard to railways in the south, and he said that if Germany waited she might find herself entirely excluded, whereas if the took advantage of the present situation she might perhaps get some concessions. His idea was that, in return for a German recognition of our special position and sphere in Persia, we might agree to give the Germans orders for about the per cent, of the materials for such railways as we build in that country

I told the chargé d'affaires that the idea of a separate agreement about Persia seemed to be receiving more emphasis from him now than it had when Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg had spoken to you, and I asked whether the Chancellor's view had changed in this direction since last he saw you.

The charge d'affaires gave me to understand that there had been a change, for the reason he had already mentioned: that the Persian question might become urgent soon, while the other matters might take months to settle.

I said that I supposed a similar arrangement with Russia was contemplated

The charge d'affaires replied that this was the case. It was proposed to have a similar agreement with Russia, and to sign it simultaneously. The Government town trade, but would be unwilling to buk those lines with the Bagdad Rudway, and they wished to guard against thee.

I then ead that is writing to you I would bear in mind what he had told me as to the Chanceflor's most recent view with regard to a Person agreement. One difficulty, however, which occurred at once with regard to it was that, if we were to give Germany a participation of 25 per cent, why should not other countries not ask us for a sumilar participation, and what were we to say to them?

The charge d'affaires urged that Germany was in a special position, owing to her rights in the Bugdad Radway; and he asked me what other countries I thought likely to put forward a class for participation.

I answered that France would certainly wish to participate, and Austria also, for she had taken exactly the same attitude with regard to Persia as Gurmany had taken.

Other countries would probably follow min.

He suggested that this difficulty might be met if we and Germany took 55 per cent, in every case, and left the remaining 45 per cent, to be disputed for by the other continues

I concluded by saying that all I could promise for the moment was to bear in mind the special desire for an agreement as to Persia when I was writing my views to you.

He asked if I had heard anything on the subject. I replied in the negative, and said that I would make captures.

M. I told his Exectlency that of course no "legal right" existed, but it was clear that a line debouching on the Persian Gulf where British interests were of the highest importance was a matter of the greatest concern to us. Sir,

I TO-DAY read to the Minister for Foreign Affairs and to the Grand Visier your between the Ottoman Government and the Bagdad Radway Company for the

made last year for a radway concession along the valley of the Tigri

Rifact Pusha said that this proposal required careful study, which he and his

Ottoman Government that had urged the continuation of the line from El Halif to Bagdad; it was the attitude assumed by Great Britain in connection with the increase of the 4 per cent, customs dues, and the demand made from the Bagdad Company to abandon their claim to this that had led the company to negotiate with a view to obtaining guarantees for the conclusion of the Halif-Hagdad section. The Ottoman Government, his Excellency observed, were now placed in such a difficult position with regard to the 4 per cent, that it appeared as if it would be necessary to abandon it if the Powers maintained their present attitude. M. Bompard had, before leaving for Paris a few days ago, repeated that the French Government asked for no conditions, but that if other Powers insisted on such France would ask for a concession for the Homs-Bagdad line.

Italy had intimated that further conditions might be naked for beyond the settlement of the claims. Even the American Government had stated that their cession being granted, and the order for the merican firm of slapbuilders. The Minister for Grand Vizier had been obliged to reply somewhat sharply to the Ottoman Government were oblivious of the services rendered by Great Bratian during the crisis of 1908-9. Their object in negotiating with the Bagdad Railway was merely to satisfy our demands regarding the 4 per cent. Not did the Ottoman Government entertain any suspense regarding British designs on Mesopotamia. They were most anxious to find a way out of the difficulty without offending Germany, to whom they were morally bound for the completion of the line when funds were available. As regards the section Bagdad-Persian Gulf at seemed to his Excellency possible to exclude it from the domain of the Bagdad Railway Company, and perhaps the best solution would be for the Turkish Government to construct that section of the line themselves. He would not however, offer any definite observation on the proposals of the Magesty's Government until he had consolted his colleagues.

The Grand Vizier, whom I saw later, spoke in much the same sense, but said it was incomprehensible to him that his predecessor should the bature of assummers regarding a modification of the Bagdad convention, for they found themselves confronted by the terms of the convention and by the legal obligation to continue the line to Bagdad.

It was also absolutely necessary in their own interests and to justify the scentifiers they were now making for the weeking guarantee that the line should have its terminas at a Lig centre instead of stopping in rod are, as it were, at Halif. What, however, he was determined to endeavour to obtain from the Germans concurrently with any arrangement for the construction of the line to Bagdad was an absolutement of their claim to build the section Bagdad Person Gulf. It would no doubt be very difficult to succeed in these as it obviously entailed a considerable sacrifice for the German company, but he felt that he would be able to obtain it. Ills idea was that that section should be built by the Ottoman Government, if necessary with foreign capital. Beyond that he had not considered the question in detail. The specific proposal now put forward by His Majorty's Government would have the careful attention of the Ottoman Government, and a reply would be sent in the same form in which it had been received.

He reminded his Highness that you, Sir, had all along been placed in a somewhat difficult position in having to justify to the British moreant le interests the imposition of an additional duty of 4 per cent which would contribute to the success of a line ultimately destined to imperiously affect our commercial position in portions of the country traversed by it—un argument which was all the stronger as Great British was a Free Trade country which practically left all Turkish imports untaxed.

His flighness specially begged that his intentions as regards inducing the German made, should be kept strictly confidential, as any suspicion of a bargain being muon would militate against the success of their negotistions for obtaining the 4 per cent merease

It is clear that Germany is magnifying the crisis and creating considerable alarm here in order to gain the support of Austria-Hungary. Referring to your telegram No. 103, the Grand Vinier maintains in reply to the argument contained in the first paragraph thereof, which I again repeated to him to-day, that, when read together, the original and additional convention of 1908 entail an obligation to find the necessary guarantees for continuing the line to the gulf. (No. 9.) Sir. Adana, May 2, 1910.

I HAVE the bonour to report that yesterday, the 1st May, the oft-delayed official opening of the work upon the Bagdad Railway took place here in the presence of the vali, members of the comming corps, and all the important officials and well-known personages of this district. The spot chosen for the ceremony was near the station of Chukir Pashs on the Mersina-Tarsus-Ailans Railway, about twenty minutes

distance from the town

As I have had the honour to explain in previous reports, the Bagdad Radway will join the Merana-Tarsus-Adama line at Yendjó, and will then run parallel with it to a point just beyond the station of Chakur Pasha, whence it will branch off and, running through the vineyards at the back of the town, come out on the open expanse of "scrab" land which her near the dyke and the banks of the Schun River. Here will be the main Adama station of the Bagdad line. The invitations to yesterday's ceremony, which took place at the point where the Bagdad line is to branch off from the Mersina-Adam line, were sent out in Garman from the offices of the company, and agond by Mr. Winkler, the head engineer, who has just returned from Alep.

The speech was frequestly applicated, and his Excellency's references to the Bagdad Company were always conched in the warment language. After this speech, prevers were offered up by the Mufti, and some shoot were dam as a " kourban" or sacrifice. The vali then cut up some turf with a gilded pickage, and with a gaded shovel shoveled the carth into a wheelbarrow; this was the eignal for an outburst of cheering, the soldiers presented arms and the military hand Bernan National Authors. dimensions, and he expressed his confidence that the diplomatic wisdom of Great Britain, Russia, and Germany combined would find a solution for what, after all, appeared to him to be a matter of secondary importance. I said to his Excellency that Germany seemed to me to be somewhat too exacting in her demands for a settlement of the Persian question. Count Achrenthal observed that Germany was merely looking after her own interests, and that every nation tried to get as big a slice of the pudding ne of seconds with the stay of same active to entries were moderate their aspirations. His Excellency did not think that any same person wished to bring about a conflict for the sake of Persia, and certainly Austria-Hungary did not desire to see such a conduct arise, as her own interests in Persia were quite inaggraficant. Count Ashrenthal's advice was that Great Britain and Germany should meet each other hulf way and come to a settlement of their respective interests in Persia in an amicable manner, opening thereby the way to a reconciliation between them all along the line. I said to Count Ashrenthal that the interests of Great Britain and Russia in Persia were quite peculiar, and differed from those of other nations. We - we gent Azistic Powers, and Persia lay between our respective territories, and we could not be indifferent as to the foreign political influences which might be developed in the near future in that country. We did not desire to exclude other nations from having legitimate trade with Persia; we were for the "open door" in the true sense of that word, but we and Russia were especially opposed to the granting of concessions of political importance to third parties without our being consulted in the matter. That we sincarely desired to maintain the independence and the integrity of Persia was clear. enough, for it was by our efforts that Porsia had been saved from breaking up owing to the misgovernment of her rulers. If we had wanted to deal a blow at the integrity of Persia we could have done so over and over again; that we had not done so must be put down to our credit, and other nations must bear thus fact in mind, and not assume that because Persia was technically independent they were at liberty to misuse her supreme interests in that part of the world. I pointed out to Count Achrenthal that if Russia were suddenly to bring pressure to bear at Constantinople to obtain from the Ports concessions for the construction of purely political radius; in Albana, or to obtain a concession to create a communeral port on the Albanian coast-which might afterwards serve as a Russian naval base both Italy and the Dual Monarchy, with the many at their back, would use all their diplomatic thunder at Constantinople to inst such concessions being granted to a Power which had no legitimate tes test ale properties a recept to a recept to a recept them open. His Excellency talked a good deal about the sovereign rights of independent Statos, but he did this in a rather langual manner as if he did not know what argumenta to use in defence of Germany's recent action in Persia. At this point Count Aelitenthal to an outport of a start security the test the freedom of commerce of all nations would run no real risks of being interfered with if the Persian Government gave Great Britain and Russia the guarantees asked for by these two Powers with regard to the granting of concessions. Count Acbrenthal confessed to use that he would be perfectly satisfied if an assurance to this effect were given to him by Great Britain, but that he would not feel the same confidence if such built in Northern Persia except with the consent of Russia, it meant that Russia would to a grant to the second of th Caucasus; in other words, Russia could, and would, throttle any foreign trade which person through that province on its way to Persia; that was where Austro-Hangaman interests were touched, for her trade could only reach Persia through the Cancasus, where its passage was already impeded by every kind of restriction. For this reason, Count Ashrenthal and, Austria-Hungary sympathised with Germany's action with regard to Persia; nevertheless, he gave me to understand that he would deeply regret if the Person question were to cause the renewal of bad blood between Great Britain and Germany. He admitted that, of course, Great Britain and Russis had one simple way of settling the Persian question, and that was to walk in and to divide Persia, or at least to deprive her of her absolute independence. However, if we acted in this way or stall about Browers, aloseta le l' Count Achreuthal, a most deplurable situation in Europe which, he hoped, the wisdom and the common sense of the rulers and the statesmen of Great Britain, Russia, and Germany would spare us from. His Excellency concluded by saying that all the Great Powers were sincerely animated by the desire of maintaining the peace of the world, and that he felt confident that this peace could be secured by the opposing parties examining the matters in dispute in a spirit of moderation and common section.

I also told German Ambasaader, with regard to the question of concessions, that we were considering our reply to a request from Person Government for an explanation of our demands, and made it clear to his Excellency that the least demand we could make was that foreigners about not receive concessions for harbours, means of incotion, and the like, without the apportunity being given as of safeguarding our political and strategic interests, and of seeing that they were not projudiced by such concessions. Some Itahan engineers stated that the way was levelled on from Boulgourlou to Ouloukishla, all easy country, but no rails are laid, and they added that the original trace for the portion from the latter place to Bozanti, which covers the mountainous portion, has had to be slightly revised; the inspection was going on, the new trace would be ready in two months-must then be sent to Frankfort for approval, and work could not begin until end of June or July. The whole section to Adana is calculated by officials and optimists to require three years for completion, by the undertakers, &c., on the spot, five years. Meanwhile men are at work building small stone houses at the spots chosen for stations along this section, where there is practically no accommodation

At Adana, where many undertakers and job-men were collected, there was no work doing, but quantities of rails and rolling stock are being accumulated there. The company's private telegraph line had just been completed to Adam from Eregli, and

It is perhaps worthy of note that since the Adana-Mersina line has come into German hands (70 per cent, of the shares being now under German control) the English stationmaster at Adama has been dismissed, and two Maltese on player on the line, while among all the foreign undertakers, Swiss, Belgius, or Italian, to whom the Bagdad has is being lot out in small contracts of from 5 to 10 kilom, each, there is not a magle British one

CONCERNING our Bagelad negotiations, you have not been quite accurately informed, and the expressions of the Garman Government have not been quite rightly

It is obvious that the German Government will not consider English concurrence in the 4 per cent, increase of the Turkish customs as an equivalent for my resigning to you the control of the section from Bagdad to the Perman Gulf You know that we can build the Bagdad Railway without the increase of the customs duties. the state of the second and told me expressly, as I repeated to you, that we must not go beyond 50 per cent ; Hilms, meanwhile, has fallen, and Djavid, at least for the moment, has got into a fright. The concurrence of the Young Turk Government would also not be obtainable at the present time for the arrangement discussed between us, as Hilmi would have had it. But that is not Germany's fault.

With united forces we should be able gradually to bring the Turks round to our view; if we oppose each other, neither will get much more than he already has; but we are, in this case, not only the complaint and friendly party, but also the bests providence. The German Government has obviously no interest in seeing merely the proclamation of an Frister very 1. Louis a standard decuesor of a trivially co-operation ought of course to be announced simultaneously, and, consequently, there should be a reciprocal granting of minor participations in the irrigation business and annular matters. Count de Salia to Sir Edicard Greu.—(Received May 30 )

(No. 151.)

Berlin, May 24, 1910.

BARON VON SCHOEN told me this evening that he was sending instructions 1 Count Mettermed not to approach you further for the present on the subject of The German Government felt that it was not the moment to do so, while in view of the recent explanations given to them on the subject the question had lost much of its acute character. There Ind been a minuscherationing about it. He had,

I was no doubt aware, seen M. Isvolsky, and had spoken to him about the manner in which, as they considered, German rights were being menaced. M Isvolcky had retoried by accessing them of coming into Persia with offers of loans and demands for concessions to the detrugent of the position and interests which Russia had acquired in that country. He had of course rejumed that this was not the case. Though they were not bound by any agreement or obligation to do so, they had expressly refranced from countenancing any proceedings of the kind. He would give his word of honour to that effect. The moundorstanding had thus been cleared up.

Moreover, the German Covernment had now learnt that the two Powers were proposing to the Powers an "exchange of views" with the Persiana before the grant of concessions which might injure lititah or Russian political interests. This was

be required before any concessions were examined. The German Government had been very sensitive on this point, but the first-mentioned formula seemed to be in accordance more or less with a private suggestion he had made for the two Powers to not discreetly ("ager descretement"), but not to make a parade of anything ("do no rion afficher"). Meanwhile, no actual deficulty in practice had arisen, but, as I must know, their press was extremely ensceptible and ready to rame an entery that German interests were in danger. I remarked on this that it was to be noted that some organis, by no means backward in the defence of German rights, lad sounded a distinct note of moderation. Baron von Schoon replied that this was the case; they had been accused in some quarters of trying to make a second Morocco affair out of the business. This was the last thing in the world they washed to do.

with Schoon spoke at some length, more than once repeating himself, especially in meesting that there had been a mounderstanding ("matentondu"). But I think that the foregoing is an accurate summary of the purport of his remarks. The in pressing left on me from the very first was that of a carefully prepared, if not very convincing explanation of a change of front with regard to the recent attitude of the Gorman Government relating to Persia. As regards the causes which may have contributed to dictate this action, I can only venture so far to suggest one or two ideas. M Jules Cambon, in the course of conversation, seemed to be struck with the idea that the Emperor's year to London and has reception there by the King and by the public had randered His Majosty more descrous of avoiding coases of friction. Perhaps the Inhewaira attitude of Austria might furnish a more planuible applanation-a view which receives some confirmation from the information respecting Count Ashrenthal's these which you were good enough to communicate to me on the 21st instant. A further netrole by Count Revention in the "Tagesterling" urges that it must be borne in mind that, should Russia be hard pressed as regards has legitimate aspirations in Northern Person, also must in self-defence and by declaring some port of protectorate. Gormany could not prevent her from doing so, though she would of course find that the change would be by no means to her advantage. A story reached me privately that this canaderation has been urged upon the German Government by Count At brenthas humself, who was not, however, the author of the auggestion, which was supposed to form part of what a pan-German newspaper recently called "English

Count Metternich and that his Government had received the same informat in from M levelsky; but, to order to prevent any misunderstanding arising from the reports which they received from the Gorman Minister at Tebran, who got what information he could, Count Mettermett would like to be quite sure of the dates. I observed that financial assistance and the 4 per cent, increase of the Turkish customs dues would be a quad pro quo. I also reminded Count Metternich that on the occasion of the German Emperor's visit it had not seemed unreasonable to the Germans, in the conversations which then took place, that we should have participation in the southern end of the Bagdad Radway, "a gate" as the Emperor had called it, without any talk of a quid pro que other than financial assistance. I see no objection to your negotiating with Herr Gwanner on the basis of that letter; but I think that the British share should be 55 per cent, and that we should construct the harbour at Koweit and have a large share in its subsequent control.

We should decidedly prefer that the "Indian" system should be substituted for the existing arrangement of kilometric guarantees; we believe that the Turkish Government could hardly object to such a modification, but if they definitely express a preference for the 1903 arrangement we should, though reluctantly, agree to it. You are, however, fully aware of the drawback of the existing arrangement for the working expenses guarantee, viz., that it militates against the development of traffic, and for this reason it should, if possible, he modified

It would be well for you to make sure that any proposals put forward by Herr Gwinner have the approval of the German Government, and you must clearly understand that we can approve as agreement definitely without consultation with the

I said, having in mind your telegram No. 156 of the 1st April to Sir A, Nicolson, that I understood it to be your opinion that once Germany would not negotiate a quater, we could attain practically the same result by negotiating separately and keeping one another fully acquainted with the course of our respective negotiations. I supposed that when Germany had put forward any concrete proposals we could concert between ourselves as to the line of action to be taken in regard to them

M. Involsky remarked that it went without saying that he would keep His Majesty's Government informed of his negotiations, but he was not sure that this was enough to meet the requirements of the case, more especially as regards the Hagdad would be necessary to "make reserves," safeguarding, as I understood him to mesh, the interests of the other Powers concerned.

I thanked his Excellency for what he had said to me, and I said that I would transmit his suggestion to you, and that you would doubtless let him have your views.

His Excellency now stated that he had been thinking of the advisability of informing Germany that the two Powers would not negotiate about to a otherwise than jointly. He thought that any kind of procedure by which we a pt in touch with one another while negotiating separately would be excessively. complicated and less certain in its results than the course which he now suggested He remarked that he was not certain whether His Majosty's Government wished for such negotiations d trois. I said His Majesty's Government would certainly prefer such negotiations, the only question was whether, if Germany absolutely declined to negotiate in this way, it would be well for the two l'owers to insist, with the result that there would be no negotiations at all

Sor Edward Grey to Sur G. Lowther,

Fareign Office, June 6, 1910 ON the 19th May the Ottoman Massier for Foreign Affairs called upon me and had a long conversation with Sir C. Hardings and invielf in regard to the Bagelad

thilant Pasta introduced the subject by referring to the instructions contained in spatch No. 107 of the 20th April, and I explained to his Excellency that it would be impossible for His Majesty's Government to agree to the proposed increase of the Turkish costoms duties from 11 per cent to 15 per cent, and that 1 should even be represented if I were to consent to the prolongation of the existing 3 per cent, mercase after 1914, if Turkish revenues were to be pledged for construction of the Bagelad Radway, the increases in the customs duties being thus used, either directly or indirectly, to create a monopoly which would destroy that part of British trade which had so long been established in Mosopotar

His Excellency pointed out the difficulty which Turkey would have in granting a measures for any railway which would become a rival of part of the Englad Railway, and so make heavier the burden of kilometric guarantees to which Turkey was pledged in connection with that railway, the greater the competition which the lingulad Railway had to meet, the greater the burden w

The state of the s t of this sort, but Rifact Pasha seemed hopeful, and was HE STEER TO LEY

We explained to his Excellency that we had thought it very infortunate that Furkish revenues should have been pledged for four sections of the Bagdad Riffer. just before the and of the old regune , but we had not made this a fatal objection an increase of the customs, because the new regime could not be hold responsible for at , now, however, when the new regene was endeavouring to find revenues, and to pledge them for four additional sections, the attuation with regard to the 4 per cent increase of the customs duties would become intolerable, unless some arrangement nelocy to this Majesty's Government and British interests could be made

I have to instruct your Excellency to press the Ottoman Minister for Foreign Affairs for a written reply to my despatch of the 20th April, setting forth his reasons For being unable to great a concession for a railway along the Tigres Valley, and what his counter-neggestion is, as stated in conversation with me already

I may add, for your Excellency's information, that Rifact Pasha had an interview with Mr Maket on the 23rd May, when her Excellency said that the Ottoman · vernment were not prepared to "fromer" the Germans by giving a concession to a British company on argument which is not very convening- and that if each a recession were granted the German Government on their part would certainly refuse . it consent to the proposed 4 per cent, customs increase. Furthermore, his Excellency contonded that if they give a concession to a British company in return for British assent to the 1 per cent increase, they would likewise have to give a concession consent, but that the Ditoman Government did not intend to give a concession for the Home Bagelad Mailway, which the French Government desired, since such a line would compete with the Bagdad Rullway, and the burden of the of the latter undertaking would be of longer duration competition.

Adma, June 13, 1410.

I HAVE the honour to report that construction work on the Bagdad Radway is now being pushed on apace, and there are gange out at work in and around Yenidje about half an hour by rail from Adama) and also near the station of Chakir Pasha at a somt where the opening coremony was held, which was described in my despatch branch off through the vineyards at the back of the town to Linearnous quantities of insternal continue to arrive from Mersina, and there or four biggage trains run daily from Mersina to Yeardie and Adana. It is, in fact, hard to remember that the Mersina line is distinct, at present, from the Bugdad Company, since the latter appear to have taken over the former, run their engines and waggins on it, and use it for their own purposes. Rumonr has it that M Endricks, director of the Mersina line, will, on relinquishing his post in mise months, time, become an active member of the Bagdad Company and be given some higher post in the administration The advent of the Bagdad Radway has caused a wild speculation in land, and extravagant buying is being indulged in by persons who think they know exactly where the line will pass, and are awaiting a great rise in property.

Enclosure 12 in No. 95.

Memorandum communicated to M. Tardieu by M. Maimon.

A LA suite de l'antente établie entre les Gouvernements français et anglais au sujet de la demande de concession d'un Chemia de Fer de Homa à Bagdad présentée par Youssouf Said Bey, M. Maimon, son associé, a eu, le 3 juin dernier, une conférence avec Haladjian Effendi, Ministre des Travaux Publics.

Le lendemain, sur la demande qu'elle lui en avait faite, M. Maimon écrivit à son Excellence une lettre dans laquelle il lui rappelait les diverses phases des négociations relatives à cette demande ains, que la cause de leur interraption, et de plus l'informait que M. Pichon avait autorisé M. Bompard à déclarer, s'il était interrogé à cet égard par le Gouvernement octoman, que le Gouvernement de la République ne voyait aucun obstacle à la continuation des négociations engagées entre Yoursouf Said Bey et la Sublime Ports.

Comme la question de garantie relève du Ministre des Finances, M. Maimon, s'est mis aussitot en communication avec Djavid Pey, avec qui il a ou phesiours conversations. Dans ces convensations le Ministre a insisté sur la nécessité pour les demandeurs de la conversion Hous-Bagdad de s'entendre avec les Allemands ann que ceux-ca ne fassent pas au dernier moment opposition à cette concession de même qu'ils s'étaient opposés à la concession de Samsoun à Sivas demandée par Mr. Chester au nom d'en groupe américain. Ce projet avait pussé par toute la filière administrative, il avait même été approuvé par les Chambres ; il ne lui manquait que la sanction Impériale ; cependant, il a du être mis de côte, pour le moment.

& M. Maimon.

Le 14, M. Maimon pressentit M. Huguenin, directeur général du Chemin de Ferottoman d'Anatolie, qui pertait le lendemain, et avec qui il avait eu précédemment sur cette question phaseurs conversations-à l'une desquelles assistait Mr. Barry. Ce memo jour if avait avec Djavid Bey un nouvel entretien, qui adressait à son Excellence un namoire dans lequel il lui exposat le programme ci-dessous, et se déclarait pet à se mettre immédiatement en rapport avec la Société du Bagdadbahn-après avoir obtens l'adbésico de M. Tardieu et Mr. Barry-afia de négocier un accord, si toutefois, le Gouvernement Imperial approuvait le programme et appreciait les grands avantages qu'il offruit au Trésor ottoman.

Le mémoire, qui portait la date du 14 juin, a été remis à Djavid Bey à sa résidence de Stamboul le même jour à 7 heures du soir. Le 16, au soir, M. Maunon, dont le départ de Constantinopie avant lieu le lendemain, recevant de son Excellence le mossage

suivant :-

"J'ai lu attentivement le programme de M. Mainen. C'est parfait ; il n'a qu'à s in occuper maintenant."

1. Le trace du Bagdadbahn de Tell Habech à Bagdad par Nombin et Mossoni a un développement de 1,392 kilom, ce qui, au taux de 15,500 fr. par kilomètre (11,000 fr. pour l'amunité appliquée au service du capital de construction, et 4,500 ft. pour l'exploitation) représente pour le Trosor Impérial une charge annuelle éventuelle de 21,576,000 fr. L'on pourrait d'autant moins en prévoir la diminution sensole que la ligne sesdite traverse de hauts plateaux romilleux et stériles que mêms les Austrieus cut delasses. En outre, la longuour de la ligne et les frais énormes qui poseraient aur le trans empecheraient le transport d'une foule de produits, tels que les céréales, les minerais bruta, les fruits, et toutes les marchandises, comme les voyageurs, exigeant la grande viteme. Et ainni, le Gouvernement Impérial ottoman ne pourrait entrevoir la tin do sea sacrifices, sans compter les longa délais inhérents à la régrosation et à la capitalization per los concessionnaires allemands des disponibilités que le Trescr leur abundonne, ce qui fuit que les contrées à féconder resterant encore longtemps privées de moyens de communication et du développement qui doit en résulter,

2. Mon projet étant de faire substituer au tracé actuel du Bagdadbalm celui de Tell Habeeh-Alep-Deir-Asab-Bagdad avec deux embanchements, l'un de Deir à Home, l'autre de Bagdad à Bassore, que mon amonié à l'homeser de solliciter, tous ces inconveniente cessent, et le Gouvernement Impérial réaliserait une économie annuelle coorme de $,680,000 fr. 1 832 kilom. À 15,500 fr. = 12,896,000 fr., nu lieu de 1,392 kilom à 15,500 fr. = 21,576,000 fr.

3. Une entente entre le Genvernement Impérial et les concessionnaires allemands sur la base de la continuation du payement forfaitaire de 4,500 fr. pour l'exploitation, avec changement de régime en ce qui concerne l'annuité de 11,000 fr. pour le service du capital de construction, procurerait au Trasce Impérial des avantages encore plus granda. Et, en effet, je crois, pouvoir dos à présent assurer à votre Excellence que si la susdite entente s'effectuait, je pourrais faire avancer au Gouvernement Impérial à 45 pour cent d'intérêt les sommes nécessaires à la construction des 832 kilom. —longueur de la ligne de Tell Habsch à Bagdad. En prenant pour base 100,000 fr. comme prix kilométrique, prix amplement sufficint ainsi qu'il résulte du deris estimatif du coût de construction de la section Alop-Delr que j'ai l'honneur d'annexer au présent exposé, l'ou arrive au chiffre total de 83,200,006 fr., sur lequel le Trésor Impérial payerant sanuellement en intérêts (4) pour cent) et en amortissement (4 pour cent) 4,160,000 ft. En ajoutant à co chiffre 3,744,000 fr. pour frais d'exploitation sur le parceurs de 832 kilum, l'on a 7,904,000 fr. qu'aurait à payer le Gouvernement ottoman, au lieu de 21,576,000 fr. suivant les arrangements existants et de 12,896,000 fr. aur le tracé modifié en maintenant les mémes arrangements.

1. Cette économie mettrait le Gouvernement Impérial en état de prévoir la construction de l'embranchement de Home à Lieir, et de celui de Bagdad à Bassora en choisissant pour cette dernière ligne un trace plus direct le long du Tigre au lieu du tracé actuel, et il doterait ama l'Empire de trois grandes artères, de Constantinople à La Mecque et éventuellement au Yomon, de Constantinople à Bagdad, et de la Méditorranée

5. Quant aux deux lignes du Home à Deir et de Bagdad à Busacra, le Gouvernement Imperial les construrant suivant un nouveau régime soume par Youssouf Said Bey à son Excellence le Ministre des Travaux Publics en date du 19 février (4 mars) dernier approuvé par mon groupe et dont j'ai en l'honneur de roms remettre une copie, lequel regime assure au Gouvernement Impérial le contrôle effectif tant dans leur construction que dans leur exploitation. [1723] 2 P

Se rappelant une objection formulée par Djavid Bey, qui reprochait au nouveau trace projeté par lui de ne point desservir des localités importantes telles que celle de Mossoul, M. Maimon a fait remarquer à son Excellence dans son exposé qu'une fois l'artère principale construite, ces localités pourraient y être relices par des embranchements qui aumient un trafic assuré assez considérable pour exclure toute nécessité de garantie kilométrique.

Si ce programme était adopté par toutes les parties intéressées, les trois débouchés principaux à Mersine, à Tripoli, et à Bassora desserviraient respectivement les trois régions distinctes dont ils sont les issues naturelles. A la première de ces régions appartient la partie la plus importante de l'Anatolie luquelle s'étend vers l'est et le nord-est jusqu'à Diarhékir et Van, et au suil jusqu'à Alep et Deir. A la seconde appartionnent les contrées arrosées par l'Euphrate et la partie de la Mésopotamie qui s'étend jusqu'à Bagdad. A la troisième, enfin, les pays riverains du Tigre au sud de Bagdad, la basse Mésopotamie, et le bassin du Chat-el-Arab

M. Marmon to Mr. Barry,—(Communicated to Foreign Office, June 27.)

Paris, June 25, 1910. My dear Barry. Paris, June 25, 1810
AUBOYNEAU, of the Ottoman Bank, has had a long conference with Turben to-day, and the latter has just 'phoned me to say that things seem to go on all right on

As far as I have been able to gather, it would seem that the Ottoman Bank people would rather like to see omitted from my programme the section from Aleppo to Deir, so as to oblige the Hagdadbaha to adopt the French section Aleppo-Hama-Home and the Anglo-French section Home-Deir, and only continue their Ragdadlahn to Hagdad from this latter place. Tarshen and as much to me this morning.

I four that this would be asking too much, in view of the fact that they are also asked to give up entirely the continuation south of Bagdad in favour of England.

I infer that the Ottoman Bank, on coming to terms with us, would undertake not to consent the 20,000,000L loan to Turkey until the concession Houslingdad is accorded on the lines of the existing arrangements. If this were really the case, then it would, to my mind, he highly desirable to come to terms with that matatation.

What a pity you are not here at this moment so as to sound our Covernment on all this, for it is evident that we must do absolutely nothing without its hearty approval. Of course you and I are perfectly agreed on that point, and so is Tardien, I feel sure. But let us not forget that he is simply guided by a desire to act honourably and be "correct"; whereas, in addition to such praiseworthy motives, you and I are actuated by the dusire to serve the cause of England.

I am off to Lock to-night, Huguenin having accepted the appointment for to-morrow, and I propose to continue keeping Sir Edward Grey informed of all that buppens, in accordance with what has been agreed between as at Constantinople.

Herein enclosed you will find copy of Tardieu's letter of to-day's date, of which I an also sending a copy to the Foreign Office.

Alanys yours, BERNARD MAIMON.

Enclosure in No. 96,

M. Tardien to M. Maimon.

26, Avenue de Menrine, Paris, le 25 juin, 1910.

Cher Monsieur, JE suis nesce conbarrassi pour repondre avac précision à la question que votre lettre me pose.

D'une part, le combinaison que vous avez envisagée touche à tant d'intérêts qu'elle demande à être examine de pres.

D'autre part, il seruit utile de savoir es qu'en penne M. Pichon, et les fètes bulgares m'empécheront jusqu'à mardi de trouver les deux heures nécessaires pour en enuser. aree bui.

En troisième lies, Mr. Barry est lois, et, enfin, les négociations qu'ent engagées avec moi les autres groupes français m'obligeraient, même si uson opinion personnelle était faite, à une extrême réserve.

Cela dit, voici mon état d'esprit actuel à l'egard de vos projets :

En principe, jo suis partissu de l'entente avec les Allemands, pour plusieurs zausons que vojes :-

1. L'affaire du Maroc a prouve qu'il ne sert à rien de se quereller pessinnt cinq and pour ensuite s'accorder et concilier les interets. C'est une opinion que le n'ai pas besoin de développer. La part que l'ai prise à l'accord franco-allemand de 1909 et à celui qui vient de se conclure su Congo precise sufformment man dat d'espris.

2. Au point de vue ture, les Puissances, autamment la France et l'Allemagne, ont interet à éviter les conflits inutiles.

3. Con conflits pourraient être sérieux si on laiseant aller les événements trop loin, car, étant denuée l'importance des éléments français et anglais qui s'occupent de l'affaire actuelle, cette affaire se fera tot ou tard, et si elle se fait saus l'Allemague, elle aura l'air de se faire contre elle, avec tous les inconvenients de cette apparence.

Voilà pour le principe. J'arrive au fait. L'entente est-elle possible, et aur quellos bases?

Il y a une première combinaison que l'appelleral l'entente à deux termes: e'est-ddire. l'affaire se faisant telle que nous l'avons conçue, sans changement de nos plans, comprenant la ligne Homs-Bagdad et probablement aussi les terigations, et les Allemands entrant dans cette affaire comme participants sur des bases à déterminer, mais sans non plus modifier le trace de la Bagdadbalm.

Il y a une seconde combinaison que j'appellerai l'entente unifice : c'ext-à-dire, notre affaire se modifiant en même temps que se modifiernit l'affaire allemande de la

Ragdadbahn et les deux fusionaant en un projet nouveau.

C'est l'hypothèse que rous avez envisagée. Que vant cette hypothèse? Pour qu'elle soit satisfaisante, il faut qu'elle tienne compte à la foie des intérête aflemands el des notres.

Votre memoire à Djavid Bey prévoit une medification du tracé de la Bagdadhaha. Elle passerait par Tell-Habech, Alep, Deir, Anah, Bagdad. Les Français (ou franco-anglais) construiraient la ligne Homs-Deir. La dernière section Bagdial-Bassora pourrait être construite par les Anglais, qui la réclament, comme vous savus. Mais lansons-la de côté pour le moment.

Cette combinaison est tres acceptable pour les Allemands. Ils arrivent à Bandad plus vite. Ils ont un tracé plus rationnel. Ils degagent la Turquie d'une burde part de la garantie kilometrique et, du même coup, s'assurent le paiement de la gornantie.

Elle est, à mon avis, beaucoup moins acceptable pour les Français. Ils avaient conçu une grande artère vers Bagdad. Dans la proposition que vous m'avez soumise ils n'out plus, en somme, à construire qu'un embranchement du Bagdad allemand.

Que peut-on faire pour rendre cette combinaison acceptable aux Français? A très grande traits, je vous propose ceni :-

La modification couplée des projets allemands et frauçais implique une pense d'accord : il faut donc que cette pensee se traduse dans les faits. Comment la traduire ?

Selon moi, le moyen, c'est que la dernière section (Deir Bagdad) et les deux outres sections (Alep-Deir et Homs-Deir) soient groupées dans la forme d'une société franco-allemande ou franco-anglo-allemande des chemins de fer de Mesopotamie ; c'est, en d'autres termes, qu'on exprune d'une façon pratique cette verne que, arrivant ensemble à Bagoad, on y est arravé d'accord.

Il y a diverses facons d'obtenir ce resultat-d'amant plus que comme contre-portie, rien n'empecho de faire aux Allemands leur place dans l'affaire des irrigations, et qu'enfin la quistion de la cote pourra se poser de nouveaux.

Les interèts et les sentiments seront satisfaits, du coré allemand, la l'Allemagne mene la construction de la ligne jusqu'à Bagdad. Il y a là un Grfeill dont je tiens compte. Mais cela, une fois fait d'accord, il n'y o pas de raison pour ne pes exploiter le tout ememble. C'est la logique dictée par l'examen de la carte.

Renversez, un contraire, la situation : Supposez le tracé allemand restant ce qu'il est et notre ligne Homs-Bagdad se faisant (car elle se fora néconsuirement), qu'est-ce que les Allemands y auront gagné? Rien; cor, pour le transport des marchandises et dse voyageurs, ils ne pourront pas nous concurrences.

Leur aventage évident est donc de modifier leur trace d'accord avec nous. Mais il ne faut per que ce soit nous qui fassions les frais de l'opération. Or, nous le ferions si nous no construisions que Homs-Deir, embranchement d'un chemin de fer allemans on notre situation seruit nulle,

En un mot, il faut que la section Deir-Bagdad, construite per l'Allemagne, deviants une fois construite, un elément d'un consertium international, dans une forme à trouver, présidence alternative, &c.

Ce sont là des vues hien incomplètes, bien hatires. Votre désir de les recevoir ce matin in oblige a faire vite-

de n'ai pas besons de voux prier de garder pour vous seul ces vues personnelles, que tant de circonstances politiques ou économiques peuvent modifier, et de les considérer seulement comme le fruit de reflexions conditionnailes.

Sincerement votre,

ANDRE TARDIEU
